[Walking into a Chinese garden, one cannot help but be enchanted by its unique oriental flavor, and walking in an atmosphere of tranquility and peace, one will discover something unlikely to be found in Western architecture – delicate and refined, complex and contained in its quietude. In contrast with natural scenery, the beauty of Chinese gardens lie in their combining culture and art into one. How did the classic Chinese garden take shape and develop? How many prototypes are there in Chinese gardens, what similarities do they share and how do they differ from each other? What experiences have been accumulated through the years of garden building, and what theories have been formed? Let's walk into the Chinese gardens and take a closer look.

[At the mere mention of a civilization, we invariably call to mind those monumental buildings that are characteristic of it. At the mere mention of the Chinese Civilization, we invariably call to mind the Great wall, the forbidden city, the Temple of Heaven and the Summer palace that highlight its unique magnificence and beauty. Great buildings, without exception, mirror the history of a nation one way or another, and bring to light its cultural features.

Traditional Chinese buildings represent one of the three great schools of architectural art, which is as important as the European and Islamic schools. This book provides you with a glimpse of traditional Chinese buildings – palace structures, tombs, mausoleums, gardens, residential buildings and religious structures, Read this book and you will get closer to the kind of cultural environment in which the Chinese have lived over the millenniums.]

The author, Mr. Chen Tingyou, has devoted himself to research into the esthetics of calligraphy for many years, and has developed his own theories on the changes and development of Chinese calligraphy. In this book, he focuses on introducing representative calligraphers from the four important historical periods of the Jin, Tang, Song and Qing Dynasties – Wang Xizhi, Wang Xianzhi, Chu Suiliang, Yan Zhenqing, Su Shi, Huang Tingjian, Mi Fu and Kang Youwei. [In half a century, China has made extraordinary achievements. Its economic development – an example for the world, may cause envy in other countries. It is gaining in the battle against poverty, illiteracy, disease, and infant mortality. It must still fight against natural disasters each year, and is caught in problems connected to modernization, urbanization, transportation, communications, energy, potable water, and pollution. It must still improve education, and develop science and technologies. But things progress, and one can see and feel the changes day after day ; it is one of the main reasons why I like to live in China. In a country that has carried out so much in only a few years, one can only be optimistic. And Optimism is a luxury today that many developed countries cannot allow themselves.]

[This book traces significant points in the history of Western exploration in and trade with China. It also touches on many other highlights, including explorations by the Russian Nikolay Przevalsky, who traveled deep into China and today is largely remembered for the horse he discovered and identified there ; the travels of 19th century women explorers in China; American Roy Chapman Andrews, discovery of the first dinosaur eggs in the Gobi desert; and the competition between two American explorers to be the first to capture a live giant Panda.

Apart from giving some basic facts about China, the book also casts some insight into the historical and economic development of China, especially the period over the past five decades. In doing so, it helps give an understanding of the way Chinese think and do business, so that Westerners can be better prepared for their role as they engage in trade with China.]

[The economic development of the PR China is speeding up in a tremendous way. Such development, however, is not always reflected in the PR China's legal system. Nevertheless, the 1999 Chinese contract law is a real corner stone of the Chinese legal reform. The present publication complies detailed comparisons between the Chinese contract law an its counterpart provisions in the German Civil Code [Burgerliches Gesetzbuch]. The comparisons have been prepared by well-known international scholars, such as e.g. Wang Liming, Zheng Chengsi, Liang Huixing, Richard Buxbaum, Claus-Wilhelm canaries and Gianmaria Ajani.

All present legal comparative studies have been developed within the framework of the Chinese German Cooperation project "Advisory service to the Reform of Commercial Laws at the Ministry of Commerce". The project is supported by the Deutsche Gesellschaft fur Technische Zusammenarbeit GmbH acting on behalf of the German Federal Ministry of Economic Cooperation and development.]

[The National people's congress of China in approaching its 50th anniversary since its birth in 1954. As China's highest organ of state power the NPC's circumstances and fate visually embodies the swing of thependulum of the democratic life of the Chinese people.

This book is the first English book on the NPC model written by a Chinese political scholar. It consists of four parts with twenty-three chapters. Part one briefly reviews the history of the Chinese politicalsystem from the Xia dynasty through the formation of the Republic of China, pointing out culturalpatterns that have affected the NPC system. Part two explains the NPC system as set down in the 1954 Constitution and argues that the destruction inflicted upon the NPC during the "cultural revolution" period amounted to a disaster for both the Communist party of china and the Chinese people. Part three displays in thick and heavy colors the reforms made to the NPC system under the 1982 Constitution. It shows a comprehensive picture of the refurbished NPC system withits elections, its powers and functions within the national power structure, its internal organization its legislative procedure, its decision powers and processes its discretion over the personnel of the other constitutional branches, its oversight powers and activities, its special committees, its relations with political parties, its Deputies and Members, its relations with the public and media, its space, time, funding an staff, its relations with local people's congresses and its relations with local people's congresses and its relation with foreign legislatures. The purpose is to accurately depict the actual operation of the NPC system with fresh materials. Part four generalizes major features of the NPC system model, justifies the model from historical, international and domestic perspectives, discusses its strength and offers criticism on its shortcomings.]
