Huhhot, China: Inner Mongolia People's Publishing House, 2010
181p. ; 25cm.
ISBN-13: 978720410884
$ 16.00

Ewenkis in Aoluguya are the last hunting tribe in China and the only minority ethnic group breeding reindeer. Prior to the 1950s, Ewenki hunters still retained the way of production and life characteristic of the last stage of the primitive society. Subsisting on raising reindeer, they ate meat of animals, wore clothes made of animal hides and resided in cuoliozi that merely provide a shelter for cold in winter and rain in summer.

Economic restructuring may break down if price reform fails. The success of economic restructuring, however, hinges not on price reform, but on ownership reform, which entails revamping the corporate system. This is because price reform serves the main purpose of shaping an environment in favor of the growth of the market economy, but only ownership reform or corporate system reform can address such issues as interests, responsibility, motivation, and incentives.

China has made its due contribution to fighting against climate change. The author of this book – as a journalist witnessing the efforts Chinese leaders, such as Premier Wen Jiabao, had delivered at Copenhagen to save the world from a “no-deal” scenario – could not help but include in the collection the true stories of what happened last November and December ahead of another round of negotiation in Cancun. This is also the starting point for the conceptualization of this book. Climate change is not merely a political negotiation affair. For many Chinese, especially those in ecologically fragile regions, it's a life-or-death issue. The stories of those climate witnesses are also the shining parts of this collection.

This book tells the personal stories of more than 20 people living in Tibet. They have different occupations: Soldier, writer, entrepreneur, photographer, painter, scholar, musician, singer, teacher, doctor, balladeer, athlete, and so on. Some of them are young, some of them are old, and some have already passed away. They have lived different lives, but have one thing in common. They all once lived in Tibet and experienced the life and times of the period since the 1950s, an extraordinary period in their history. They not only observed these changes, but also participated in them. These true and touching stories will no doubt open a window for readers who are not familiar with this period of Tibet and are interested in knowing more about it.

$ 25.00

This book is the second volume of the series "My Impression of China – China's Image in the Eyes of Foreign Officers." Writers of the articles of the book are all foreign officers from twenty countries in Asia, Africa, South America and Oceania. During their one-year stay in China, besides classroom study, they also had extensive and profound exchanges with Chinese governmental officials, experts and scholars. They went to other regions at different levels of development for visit and investigation. Such experiences of extensive and close contacts with Chinese society enabled them to develop more comprehensive, systematic and deeper understanding of China.
