Chinese characters are square-shaped ideograms and the only ancient language alive in the world. The existence of Chinese characters is a miracle in the human civilization history. Today, Chinese characters are still developing. This ancient language used by most people in the world is embracing the future vigorously. This book briefly introduces basic knowledge about China's profound culture of Chinese characters with easily understandable words and exquisite pictures. It will take readers on a relaxing and interesting journey in the "kingdom of Chinese characters".

"Zhoukoudian Memory" is the oral history of Zhoukoudian, edited by Dong Cuiping, curator of Zhoukoudian Museum. The author interviewed more than 20 experts, scholars and related staff who worked at the Zhoukoudian site for archaeological excavations or Zhoukoudian museums, and recorded their memories as words. These reminiscent words may have memory deviations and may even contradict each other, but they all reflect the excavation of the Zhoukoudian site from the 1950s and 1960s to the present, and the research and exhibition on the history, geography and culture of Zhoukoudian. One aspect is the first-hand information on the history of Zhoukoudian. This edition is the English version of this book.

What was Chang'an City like in the Tang Dynasty? What is the meaning of "temple"? What are the differences between an imperial garden and a private garden? What changes did Chinese modern and contemporary architecture go through? What characteristics does Chinese architecture show in the new century? This book containing a lot of exquisite pictures is intended to guide readers through China's long architectural history of thousands of years from the glorious achievements in ancient traditional architecture and the complicated course of development in the modern and contemporary era to today's magnificent modern cityscapes and show a relatively complete picture of Chinese architecture to interested people.

The Power of Time – Pictorial Records of China’s Reform and Opening-Up

40 years ago, we aspired for the beautiful life of “living in buildings, using electric lamps and telephone” and eating “beef stewed with potatoes” in daily life; 40 years later, people living in material abundance rack their brains to find the ways to keep their spiritual world from loneliness. China’s society and economy have seen a geometric growth in the 40 years. The photographers undertake the responsibility of recording the times, keep a video diary with their camera and give a panoramic sketch of the times. It is the poetic thought and magic power of time. The book carefully selects more than 300 works of Chinese and foreign photographers that objectively show from multiple dimensions the changes of the Chinese in basic necessities of life, consumption, money management and social connections from 1978 to 2018—It’s impossible for us to retrieve the lost time but we can open the photo album and recall the happiness and hardships through the whole journey recorded in photos.

Even if the world is awkward and the society is impetuous, there are always some people who are sticking to a craft and a tradition because of a love, a feeling, a dream, and a hope. Even if the process is difficult and the future is unknowable, it never gives up. Because of this insistence, they are especially precious in this fast-moving society. The author spent 4 years searching for more than 30 traditional Chinese craftsmen, tracking and photographing their lives and work, recording the persistence and dreams of the current Chinese traditional craftsmen, and their living conditions, and the development status and predicament of traditional crafts.

In the Chinese way of describing the necessities of life, clothing ranks at the top of “clothing, food, shelter and means of travel”, which shows its important place in life. In this country with a long history of garments and ornaments, with integration of ethnic groups and cultural exchange between the East and West, clothing styles and customs have been evolving since ancient times. Almost from the day when clothes emerged, people’s social status, living customs, aesthetical tastes and various cultural concepts were integrated into them. Clothes are the most straightforward and realistic reflection of social and historical scenes. In this sense, the clothing history is also a vivid history of the development of civilization.

The creators of Chinese folk art come from the working class masses of China's rural areas. They are mostly female laborers. A communal art, folk art would engender all of Chinese literature and all later art. Its presence is evident in everyday food, clothing, shelter and transportation; in traditional festivals, ceremonies and rituals, and in beliefs and taboos. As a living example of cultural heritage, it shows the continuity of Chinese culture from primitive society to present, a culture that bears distinct national and geographical characteristics. With this heritage, Chinese culture boasts the longest history and the richest historical sources, and of all cultures, considers itself the most widely shared and the most geographically distinct. Its cultural implication and art form accumulate a historical culture of 7,000-8,000 years dating back to primitive society.

China is the birthplace of one of the four greatest civilizations in the world, hence those cultural relics which, in huge quantities and immensely rich varieties, have always been fascinating. These cultural relics were produced during different periods of the Chinese history, over well over 7,000 years. They are gems of the Chinese civilization. This book gives a brief account of 8 types of cultural relics unearthed in China so far, including pottery, porcelain, jade and bronze. These are seen as the most representative of the Chinese culture, each in its own way providing a glimpse into ancient China.

Calligraphy is the quintessence of Chinese culture. When the ancient Orientals carved the earliest abstract symbols on the walls of their cave houses, and on animal bones and tortoise shells, their symbolic action marked the beginning of the Chinese written language and civilization. At the same time, it indicated the beginning of the splendor of Chinese calligraphy. Why has Chinese calligraphy been able to survive several thousand years? How could it become a rare art independent of its functions for writing and recording events? What kind of close relations has it developed with the aesthetic standards, value concepts and cultural spirit of the Chinese people? How can we enter into this mysterious black and white world?

Traditional Chinese painting was fundamentally an abstract art form. Although there were no absolute abstract Chinese paintings in its original meaning, objects in a painting were not a direct copy of the nature world following the principle of perspective. It was rather a combination or harmony between the nature world and human emotion, a product of “heaven (nature) and human”. The effect Chinese painters would like to illustrate in their paintings was not a visual effect of colors and patterns as their Western counterparts would like to achieve. The description of objects in their paintings was no means accurate and few concerned about such factors as colors, principle of perspective, anatomy, surface feel, and relative size. What they would like to achieve was a world in their mind of non-materials. The nature world was not an object for them to make a true copy and it was rather elements for them to build their own world.

The heaven has time, the earth has vitality, material has beauty, work has ingenuity. Chinese arts and crafts enjoy a unique reputation in the history of material civilization among various nations in the world. For several thousands of years, people's handicrafts in their development echoed with the rhythm of life working with the rising sun and reposing at sunset. All species of handicrafts in their earliest states are related to usage: always practical, plain and warm, and in possession of a wisdom that adapts to agricultural civilization. Even the high end handicrafts at the court and among the literati, such unpretentious tradition still remain and reveal a touch of pragmatic trace. All this is associated with the everlasting farming culture of China and her exceptional geographical position, which has left us rich cultural heritage in which wisdom of life and human creation is contained.

There is a widespread saying about foods and drinks in China – “food is the first necessity of the people.” It shows the important place of “eating” in Chinese people’s life. Chinese people pay attention to eating and know how to eat. Foreigners who have been to China not only marvel at the numerous types of Chinese local foods, but also admire the changeful tastes of Chinese dishes. Though dishes in various areas have different tastes, “good colors, smells and tastes” are pursued for all dishes. Chinese people set great store by enjoyment of good foods, demonstrating joyful and leisurely eating in all aspects of daily life and pursuing their own “art of eating.” This eating culture’s influence on the world’s diversified cultures is far beyond eating itself.

The ascent of China's economy over the past forty years may be one of the more remarkable happenings in human history. Few understand it. Those outside China consider the massive changes a mystery. Those inside China have been challenged with taking more than 1.3 billion people from an agrarian existence into the modern world, and in the face of complex economics involving extreme conflicts of interest. Nobody ever did it before; nobody will ever do it again. Given the convulsive upheavals required, the difficulty of the task has been, and remains, hard to imagine. This book describes those upheavals and that process over the years from 1978 to 2018. It represents a remarkable achievement in condensing a welter of events and changes down to the bare essentials. In summing up a period of history, it also serves as a query about what is to come next.

Since its reform and opening-up in 1978, China has taken off from a negligible developing country in the global economic stage to the second largest economy, the largest goods trader and the largest manufacturer worldwide. China's reform and opening-up in economy and finance has been vibrantly soaring, yet not without difficulties and setbacks. A Chinese path of reform and opening-up has been blazed through nearly four decades and the Chinese experience has been accumulated. To straighten up and sum up such experience and lessons will be conducive to China's further reform and development in economy and finance, and holds significance to the economic and financial reform, development and growth of the economies of other developing countries. This book, placing China in the global vision, not only observes and compares China's economic and financial reform and opening-up development and achievements, but also discusses the change of position of China's economy and its influence on the world economy.

Aerospace, high-speed rail, bridges, supercomputers, and new energy are the shining new jewels in China's industrial crown. Their achievements and innovations are part of China's rapid economic growth, and they are major contributors to its creative leadership in international trends. From the research conducted, through the results attained, the international reputation they have won, and the influence they wield inside and outside of China, to the active role they have played in improving the well-being of the people - these five distinct fields of activity all showcase the best of the country's scientific and technological development.

The present book represents a most authentic and up-to-date study of the subject by Professor Fei Hsiao Tung, a Chinese authority in the field, and members of his research groups. Professor Fei first became aware of the existence of small towns as an independent social entity and their far-reaching significance to the entire society during field study in the 1930s in Kaixian’gong Village in Wujiang County of southern Jiangsu Province. It had been his long-cherished hope that he could one day expand his research on individual villages to cover entire areas with small towns as their centres. However his chance for such a comprehensive and systematic study did not come until 1983. This research project on small towns is, therefore, his “dream come true.”

Traditional Chinese Medicine (TCM) is a great and valuable treasure built by the Chinese nation through long-term production and practice. Aiming to cure diseases and suffering, TCM focuses on the harmony between people and nature, forges its theoretical framework and forms unique diagnosis and treatment methodologies based on ancient philosophical concepts. What are the causes and effects of the brilliant TCM? How does TCM recognize the human body? What about the major theories and thinking? What are the details of herbal treatments and acupuncture and moxibustion therapies? This book will usher readers into profound TCM with simple words.

Cambodia is an important stop on the ancient Maritime Silk Road. It was once known as Funan and Zhenla in Chinese history books, and created a brilliant Angkor civilization. Gu Jia's "Southeast Asian Civilization on the Silk Road (Cambodia) (English version)" takes the time and preface, using historical materials and the latest academic research results, together with carefully photographed pictures, to sort out the unique historical evolution of Cambodia. . The book uses the oriental discourse to show the world the ancient glory of Cambodia. It is both a vivid history of Cambodian national civilization and a vivid history of Sino-Cambodian friendship exchanges.

Seeing a Peking Opera performance for the first time, a foreigner would wonder: why are faces of actors painted red, white, black, yellow or green? Are they masks? But masks are separate from the face. Facial make-ups in Peking Opera are different from masks. Intrigued, many foreign tourists would go backstage to see actors and actresses remove stage makeup and costume. Next time, they would go there before a performance starts to see how performers do their makeup. Luciano Pararotti, the great tenor of international fame, once had a Peking Opera actor paint on his face the makeup of Xiang Yu, a valiant ancient warrior portrayed in numerous Peking Opera plays.

This book introduces Chinese philosophy along the line of topics instead of the line of history. The book has five topics, including: what is the nature of the world; what are the relationships among things; what are social norms; what is the orientation of life; what is the cognitive structure. The first two parts are about views on nature or the world; the third and fourth parts are about views on society and life; the fifth part is about views on cognition and wisdom. This book is intended to give readers the most basic understanding of profound Chinese philosophical thoughts as well as the most excellent and greatest wise ancient Chinese people and wisdom.

Taking into account the Sino-foreign ideological interactions, this book makes a vivid tour to the Chinese development of religions for several thousand years. In a reasonably objective language, it systematically reviews Chinese religious traditions, precisely summarizes the fundamental feature of Chinese ancient religions and their mutual relationships as “a diversified harmony”, which is specifically interpreted as “honoring the heaven and ancestors, pursuing harmony of diverse sources, prioritizing politics with the support of religions, and valuing virtues in favor of worldly affairs”. The book straightens up the history and status quo of Christianity and Islam as well as of the Chinese-foreign religious exchanges, tells the religious development in Tibet, Xinjiang, Hong Kong, Macao and Taiwan, and provides insight into the world's relevant hot issues such as the religious extremism, terrorism and heresy. This book interprets the “harmony” of Confucianism, Buddhism and Taoism in traditional Chinese culture. In both theoretical and practical veins, it answers why the Communist Party of China, an atheistic Party, can sincerely adopt the policy of freedom in religious belief, unite the believers and non-believers to the largest extent into the cause of reform and opening-up and socialist modernization drive, so as to contribute to the realization of the China Dream of national renewal.

In this new text, sealed at Peking on March 1, 1680 and addressed to Superior General Giovanni Paolo Oliva, Ferdinand Verbiest speaks as Vice-Provincial of the China mission. He formulates a small series of postulata, requests, which partly repeat longstanding complaints from the mission, posed again on the occasion of its centennial jubilee and at a moment when opportunities appeared limitless, yet constrained by the juridical and structural framework of the Vice-Province.

Some of the arguments in this internal document, one not meant to be published, also show Verbiest's concern safeguarding, in the short term, Jesuit positions in China vis-à-vis other missionary congregations.

More than in any other document, these postulata show that Verbiest deserved the title of columen missionis, pillar of the mission, for his talent at forceful argumentation, using all possible means to strengthen the China mission's position, especially by freeing it from the Japan Province and promoting it to the level of a full Province within the Society of Jesus.

Wushu, the Chinese martial art form known as kungfu in the West, embodies the national traditional culture in martial art form and also reflects the self-defense and health practices of Chinese people. The core philosophy of Wushu is drawn from the Confucius principle of physical and mental integration combined with neutralization; the Taoist principle of dynamic balance; the Buddhist principle of showing cultural syncretism of Confucianism, Daoism and Buddhism in China; and the Eastern theory, which believes man is an integral part of nature.

China is a major country of festivals. In the long history, vast territory and diversified ecology, various Chinese ethnic groups created, inherited and developed the diversified culture of festivals. These festivals are stages epitomizing Chinese culture and its important components. Various elements of Chinese culture such as myths, legends, religions, rites, traditional Chinese opera, music, dancing, foods and drinks, arts and crafts are inseparable from festivals. They carry the Chinese nation's historical memories, cultural creations, social mechanisms and joys of life. In festivals, people satisfy their sensual needs, strengthen group recognition, realize multiplication of ethnic groups, and look for mental peace and spiritual solace.
