The fall of Communism in the 1980s, leading to the Democratic Revolution in the 1990s, resulted in drastic changes in Mongolia's societal perspective. Since that time, 28 years have passed, yet almost no difference can be seen between the written history of today and that of the past, when the whole of Mongolian society was driven by Soviet ideology. We are misinforming Mongolia's post-Democracy generations, by passing along those written histories and literature, steeped as they are in this ideology.

Our book is written as a corrective to this situation; it presents Mongolia's history during this period, without the influence of ideology because we believe Mongolians deserve to know their own path, to better understand their situation today. We have attempted to write a comprehensive history book with fresh eyes, based on scientific research evidence. It is our fervent hope that the information contained herein will benefit everyone interested in the history of modern Mongolia.
