[This book is a compilation of the papers about Korean Neolithic written by Prof. Nelson over the course of her career in East Asian Archaeology. The first section deals with Plant and Animal domestication in Korea. The Second part concerns ways to identify the functions of artifacts. The next papers discuss tribes, lineages, the division of labor, and gender. Comparisons of Korean Neolithic with sites elsewhere in Asia help place Korean sites in their regional setting. The book ends with some thoughts about Korean Archaeology in the past and the future of Korean.]

[The growing importance of multinational activities worldwide has led to a policy concern about the ways that international investment responds to incentives and affects the host economy. Each study presented in this volume deals with a specific subject related to the multinational behavior and its impact on the host economy: the value of being a multinational, determinants of foreign direct investment, tax incentives for the location choice of investment and technology activities, the impact of local tax incentives on inward foreign investment, and the implications for trade pattern of multinational investment.]

[This book consists of pioneering studies by Professor Shin that provide a comprehensive and insightful analysis of some important topics in the social history of Korea.

The first part of this book covers the history of Korean rural community which was the core of Korean traditional society, focusing on land, labor and culture of peasants. Some discussions on land reform are also included. The second part covers Korea's response to Western challenges in the nineteenth century. The Third part covers the Korean national independence movement during the period of Japanese occupation. This book will help readers around the world in forming a better understanding of the richness, importance and complexity of Korea's historical experience.]

[Korea has had a long history of training interpreters in foreign languages. Modeling after the Koryo institution, the Choson government established the Bureau of Interpreters, Sayogwon, in 1393, one year the inauguration of the dynasty. Since then, this bureau was maintained for five hundred years as the unique institute for training in foreign languages in Korea and as an office of the Choson government which was responsible for supplying all the official interpreters for diplomacy. In the Sayogwon, the four languages –Chinese, Mongolian, Japanese, and Jurchen (later replaced by Manchu) – were taught and textbooks and glossaries for the study of the languages were published and revised in the later periods. Those books extant today are invaluable sources for the historical study of the four languages. In the first part of the present study the history and institutional features of the study of foreign languages in the Choson dynasty are discussed. In the second part, the textbooks and glossaries, both the extant and lost ones, published for the study of the foreign languages are introduced with detailed biographical information.]

The Catholic Church in Korea : Its Origins 1566 – 1784 / Juan Ruiz De Medina S.J. ;
English Translation by John Bridges S.J.
Korea : John Bridges S.J.
380 p.; 24cm
Includes Bibliography and Index.

[The book has two parts, one historical, the other consisting of unedited documents. The first part contains the mythology and the history which show the influence of Korean culture in Japan, the subjugation of a part of Korea by Japan, their mutual relations and the origin of their enmity. The second part contains unedited documents which put us in direct touch with the main characters of this period, Europeans and Koreans, and supply us with rich information and detailed history. This is a book for both the specialist and the non-specialist. It makes an important contribution to the understanding of the general history of Japan and Korea, as well as the history of the Catholic Church in both countries. It enables us to gain a better knowledge of the work and interests of the Catholic Church in Korea and of the history of the Korean martyrs in Japan.]

[This book relates to the initial period of clashes between the Oriental and Western civilizations on the Korean Peninsula. It is also a history concerning a clash of worldviews (Weltanschauung) or mentalities. Current Korean reactions to everyday international interactions are governed by an unexpressed compulsion that is a byproduct of the Korean worldview. This typical Korean mentality regarding foreign powers remains in essence unchanged since Korea's first encounters with the Western "barbarians" in the 1860's.]

 Korea in International Politics : 1945-1954 - Britain, the Korean War, and the Geneva Conference / Yoo Byong-Yong

 Korean Studies Series No. 24

[The Korean problem after the World War II was either directly connected with Great Power interests or affected by the outcome of Great Power politics. This book seeks to analyse Britain's foreign policy towards the Korean unification from the end of the World War II to the end of the Geneva Conference in 1954. By Examining in detail the policies of Great Britain and the position of South Korea on unification of the country, this study may help to contribute to mutual understanding between the peoples of Korea and the United Kingdom. The Korean portion of the Geneva Conference has not drawn much attention from the academic world, overshadowed as it was by the immensity of the Indochina question. It is necessary to explore more fully why the Geneva Conference on Korea was originally convened and why it failed to reach any agreement on Korean unification. The British leaders did not intend to formulate an effective policy for Korean unification, but to use the Korean problem as an event which could contribute toward the easing of international tension and as an occasion to get people around the table.]

[Korean printing still holds some surprises. We thought we knew everything of its history. However, recent research in France and Korea undertaken by Doctor Park Byeng-Sen contradicts and changes our historical references and assets. This book reveals us that Korea is the fatherland of metallic mobile type printing invention. Indeed, the first work in the world being printed with metallic mobile types would not be done by Gutenberg, but by Korean printers who had controlled this technique several years before. This discovery will have certainly an important impact on Korea's position in the Point of historical and cultural view, making this peninsula a new rich pole of information on the progress and technical knowledge of the South-east Asian population from Antiquity to the Modern Period.]

 Korea and the United States Through War and Peace 1943 – 1960 / Henry Chung ;

[History has conveniently forgotten Henry Chung (1890-1985). That is about to change. With the publication of Korea and the United States Through War and Peace, the Institute for Modern Korean Studies ensures that the voice of non-communist, conservative Korean opinion in the early and middle of the 20th century is registered in the annals of Korean – and International History.
 Chung's last work, Korea and the United States Through War and Peace, is an eyewitness, insider account of the non-communist South Korean case and is an invaluable historical document, providing a snapshot of the insight, point of view and the aspirations of the Korean people.]

Recent transformations in Korean law and society / Edited by Dae-Kyu Yoon Seoul : Seoul National University Press, c2000. xiv, 469 p. ; 26 cm.
 Includes Index.
 89-521-0217-7
 $ 50.00

[This book examines the recent changes in Korean society with an explicit focus on legal transformations. Korean society has undergone significant changes during the last decade and the democratization process that began in the late 1980s has altered numerous Korean laws and legal institutions. Impressive levels of economic expansion right up until the financial crisis of 1997, coupled with the IMF bailout that followed, has together made a powerful impact on Korean society. The articles in this book explore the dynamic relationship between law and social change in Korea from various perspectives, reflecting the diverse interests of each individual author.

The authors consist of practicing lawyers, as well as professors of law, some of who employ interdisciplinary approaches to legal studies by attributing cultural, political, and socioeconomic conditions under which legal norms are applied and enacted to resolve problems. The articles in this book are divided into three distinct areas according to their topics: democratic reform under the new civilian government; legal reforms in the financial and business sectors after the IMF crisis; and the interaction between legal and social norms in the context of a more democratic and sophisticated Korean society.

This book is the very first volume on the topic that has been published in English to help foreigners grasp the substance and significance of the legal changes in Korea since the transition to civilian rule and the IMF crisis. As such, it will be invaluable to foreign attorneys and will also be of great benefit to students of Korean law and society.]

Cultural Protection Policy in Korea : Intangible Cultural Properties and Living National Treasures / Yang Jongsung
 Seoul : Jimoondang Publishing Company, c2003
 viii, 166 p. ; 23cm.
 89-88095-68-5
 Korean Studies Dissertation Series No. 3
 $ 39.50

[Korea is a nation with an ancient heritage of diverse indigenous folk traditions. In 1962, the South Korean government established for Cultural Property Protection Law (CPPL) as a part of the conservation policy, under which folklore genres are authorized as important intangible cultural properties and folklore performers as designated as living national treasures. The Cultural Protection System is a policy and a set of laws, and as such its, power, force, and breadth of control are deeply reflected in the performers and performances of folklore throughout Korea. Focal questions arise as to Whether "folk" (performers) can still be active in the communicative process when their creativity is limited under the rules of the protection laws, and Whether "lore" (performance) can continue as a form of communicative process When it is static under the rules of the protection law. This Study is concerned with the effect on folklore genres and folklore performers of national legislation for the protection of cultural properties and its related policies as the process had developed through 1994. In the first part of the present study Korean folklorist's concepts from the field and their contributions to the development of the CPPL are discussed. In the second part, folklore and folk performance are addressed as the related to political ideology and expressions of cultural nationalism.]

The A/A – Bar Dependencies in Korean : The Minimalist Approach [Appendix : Understanding Minimalist Grammar] / Yong-Suk Kim
 Korea : Kyungjin Publishing Co., c2002

[This book consists of four main chapters and an appendix of three subparts. Each of the main chapters contains an article, exploring the phenomena of Korean A- or A-bar dependencies within Chomsky's (1995) minimalist framework. The articles here were mostly conducted or designed for my research program in the University of California, Irvine, 1997-1998. In the appendix, I make attempts, in Korean, to explain the grammatical system of the minimalist linguistics, and to interpret the new terminology so far provided in the minimalism since Chomsky (1991). So, they are expected to give good aid to Korean minimalist beginners in reading the works of minimalist studies.]

[The major aims of this book are to provide an up-to-date and comprehensive picture of the population of Korea, and to help the reader sharpen his or her perception of population growth and change. This book offers a composite view of the major demographic structures, processes and dynamics, and reveals various aspects of the Korean population in the Twentieth century.

This book consists of eleven chapters dealing with a wide range of demographic issues: the stages and characteristics of the Korean demographic transition, data sources for demographic studies, components of population growth, population structure, geographic distribution, Korean communities overseas, and population policies. These issues are examined through the analysis of published reports and micro-data from the sixteen population censuses since 1925 as well as various statistical data on fertility, mortality, marriage and divorce, economic activity, and migration.

This monograph is intended to serve both as a classroom text for courses on population studies, and as a reference for scholars, analysts, planners and other professionals interested in population matters or have occasion to use the data on the Korean Population.]

[Regional Community -Building in East Asia offers a bird's-eye-view of the history, processes, and potential paths of multilateral cooperation in East Asia. Beginning with the launching of the Asian and Pacific Council (ASPAC) in 1966 through the formation of APEC and ASEM in the 1980s and 1990s, this volume traces the evolution of multilateral institutions and regimes in the Asia Pacific region. The author asserts that accelerating globalization, growing interdependence in the post-Cold War era, enhanced sub-regional cooperation between Korea, Japan and China, and shifts in U.S.policy, among other factors, have generated greater interest in fostering multilateral security dialogues and economic cooperation going into the 21st century.]

[Political and economic transformations that took place in East-Central Europe following 1989 precipitated a new cycle on the world's political, economic, and cultural map. At about the same time, South Korean politics also underwent a transformation in away similar to that of the Central European countries, albeit with different economic constellations. In both Central Europe and South Korea, changes started from the bottom up with a radical beginning, but transformations that took place afterwards were 'peaceful' and 'orderly'. In the process, the existing political institutions were transformed 'decisively' and 'irreversibly'. This book is to provide a comparative assessment of regime transformations and explore the main implications of this fascinating development.]

 The Political Economy of Democratic Consolidation : Dynamic Labour Politics in South Korea / Sun Hak Tae

[The Korean labour politics case study suggests that globalisation may bring ambivalent outcomes to the relationship between labour politics and democratic consolidation. This is the paradox of Globalisation. Regulation theorists argue that the global obsession with competitiveness, efficiency, profitability, and productivity hinders the extension of worker's citizenships (e.g., from civic and political to social and economic) Neoliberals contend that in the new global economy, that pushes the world to adopt market-driven adjustment, a Keynesian welfare state is no longer the supreme goal for politicians, business, and labour. The Korean experience challenges both these theoretical assumptions. In the case of Korea, it is true that globalisation has been jeopardizing workers' social and economic foundations by precipitating labour union fragmentation, destabilization, and marginalisation. It should be noted, however, that Korea has also opened up prospects for increasing the social and political inclusion of labour and providing workers rights.]

Empty House : Zen Masters and Temples of Korea / Chris Verebes
 Korea : Eastward Publications, Inc., c2002
 314 p.; ill.; 23cm
 Includes Index
 89-952155-4-2
 $ 39.50

[Empty house explores the origins of Korean Zen and traces its history as a living tradition right up to the present day. Whilst Chinese Zen was effectively wiped out by the Cultural Revolution, the Korean tradition maintains the original vigorous teaching style of the Lin Chi School.

Empty house explores the Hwadu teaching device and presents biographical materials on the most notable Korean Zen masters, together with selected teachings and poems.

The book is structured chronologically: the biographies of the masters appear next to photographs of the temples with which they are most closely associated, and all the temples which feature in the book may be found in a useful location map in the appendix. Empty house is the most comprehensive and thoroughly researched work available to date on the Korean Zen Tradition. It is a fascinating and authoritative resource for anyone with an interest in Zen Buddhism.]

[Buddhism and Shamanism have long been two of the most important elements in the religious lives of the Korean people. Over time extensive syncretism between the two has occurred, to the extent that some people say that they are virtually indistinguishable. Their peaceful coexistence has been symbiotic and hierarchical, with Buddhism having superiority over shamanism. In this book the author analyzes the basic principles and practices of both 'religious', to divulge the nature and reasons for the extensive syncretism between two such disparate religious phenomena. She concludes by discussing the current state of the relationship between the two against the backdrop of the rapidly changing religious scene in contemporary Korean Society.]

[This book, a collection of the articles that the author has written over four years, examines Korean higher education from a predominantly Confucian perspective. It introduced domestic and foreign readers to three domains of Korean higher education : educational thoughts in terms of the West and the East, religious thought and Confucian culture, and the Korean thirst for higher education : cultural sources, economic consequences, and reform. Although each domain explores a different aspect of the development and experience of higher education in Korea, the overall result is an illustration of the major educational thoughts and policies affecting Korean education.]

[A uniquely collaborative work of two sociologists, one specializing in the studies of North Korean society and the other focusing on South Korean development, this is a first English volume specifically dealing with social change in the two Koreas relative to the issue of national integration, using empirical data analyzed and interpreted in terms of unique theoretical views of modernization. This Volume may well be utilized as a helpful reading material for an advanced course on social change and modernization in the two Koreas. In the long run, it can also serve as a useful empirical source for the historical study of divided Korea in the 20th century.]

[This book consists of thirteen chapters in four different parts. The authors in Part I, provide a comparative analysis of malnourished North Korean children and other normal and malnourished children in other parts of the World. Severe food shortage not only has an impact on physical growth of children but also on intellectual, psychological, mental, and social development.

In Part II, there are three papers on children's behavior as a result of malnutrition. A Child's intellectual, emotional, psychological, and mental impact of malnutrition is discussed from nutritional and psychological perspectives.

In Part III, there are three papers on socio-economic impact of food shortage and malnourishment. One of the ultimate goals of this book is to provide an accurate picture of the food shortage and nutrition status of North Korean People and estimate the negative impacts on mental, psychological, and intellectual development of children, the society, population, and the economy.

In Part IV, there are four papers proposing solutions to the problem of food shortage and malnourishment.]

 From Tradition to Consumption : Construction of a Capitalist Culture in South Korea /

[From Traditions to Consumption is a ground breaking work that provides a wonderfully innovative and insightful explanation of the eclipse of tradition society and the rise of a new consumer culture during South Korea's recent march to economic development. The book convincingly portrays this shift to cultural modernity as the product of larger state policies on industrialization as well as the reasoned response of people to rapidly shifting forms of labor, everyday life, and state narratives. Key to this transformation from agriculture to a modern life has been the drastic alternation of the family a unit of consumption. This state-led development also has redefined gender roles in Korea. The pressing needs for production and consumption to bolster economic development have resulted in the creation of a middle-class family marked by the white collar male and the urban housewife. These new social roles serve to make the process of consumption to be the basis for modern identity.]
