[This book is about the lives of children living in urban poverty and its consequences on their day-to-day life and their future. A hundred and forty children living in most deprived conditions in Dhaka, tell their story. They relate their experiences and express their views about what it means to them to be poor and about their dreams.
National policies, economic globalisation and its impact on poverty, poverty alleviation programmes and foreign aids are appraised with regards to their bearing on poverty creation and /or reduction.
The spotlight of the book is on Bangladesh, however, the findings are equally valid for other poverty stricken areas of the globe.]

[The Sixteen articles in this volume provide a critical examination of the above issues and a rigorous analysis of empirical data that relate to human development and quality of life. This volume also attempts to provide policy prescriptions for problems centering on the main theme. The timely subject matter, objective analysis, and policy prescriptions are expected to prove useful to academicians, development practitioners and policy makers in Bangladesh, as well as in other developing countries.]

[Economic Analyses of Contemporary Issues in Bangladesh is a collection of studies by economists and other social scientists, working mostly on economic and social policies and issues in Bangladesh. This compilation of analytically well-grounded studies by established researchers covers a variety of topics such as economic growth patterns, regional convergence of per-capita income, micro-credits, natural resource management, household choice of water and sanitation facilities, capital markets, exchange rate policy, corruption, and transfer pricing by foreign investors. This volume is written for both the students and teachers of economics and related disciplines, such as business, finance and development studies. Also, as an independent, balanced and homegrown source of information, it would be useful to both policymakers and other practitioners dealing with the contemporary issues in Bangladesh.]

[This book examines the extent to which these powers are formal or real. It explores the scope and limits of parliamentary control of public expenditure in Bangladesh. The study reveals that Parliament is now better poised to conduct effective scrutiny of public expenditure largely because of changes that have taken place in party composition and parliamentary procedures in recent years. The book identifies the constraints that discourage the MPs from being proactive in Parliament and assesses the proposals suggested to further strengthening of parliamentary surveillance over public finance.
This is the first book of its kind and should be of interest to academics, parliamentarians, party politicians, researchers, students, donors and civil society representatives.]

[Deltaic Bangladesh does not have enough forest cover. But the patches of forests that still survive are unique and are homes to hundreds of thousands of life forms. The forests are also homes to many unique ethnic communities that represent unique traditions, knowledge systems, history and cultures. So, the forests in the true sense are integral parts, of our existence and civilizations. Sadly enough, we have neglected our natural history and allowed most of our forests to be stolen. Despite these sad realities we must make fresh pledges to protect the last stands from pillage, not to lose the grounds of our imagination.]

[This book analyses the emergence of indigo in Bengal as part of the history of globalisation. For centuries indigo dye was a global commodity of great value, sought after by the most powerful trading companies. Indigo played an important role in shaping the modern world by connecting people in far-flung corners of the globe.

The first part of the book presents an overview of attempts by rival European powers – notably Spain, France and Britain – to set up indigo export systems in the Americas, Asia and Africa. It provides an explanation for the sudden success of indigo in a new area, Bengal, around 1800 : within 20 years, Bengal indigo had wiped out its competitors from the Caribbean and Central America. This part of the book concludes with an account of how the French tried to steal the secret of Bengal's success in order to set up indigo production in West Africa.

The Second part of the book is a translation of a secret report on Bengal Indigo, written by Pierre-Paul Darrac on orders from Paris in 1823. This is the first time it is published. Apart from its interest as a piece of astute agro-industrial espionage, it is also the earliest known detailed report on indigo production in Bengal.]

[This book is a collective appraisal along with some rare information relating to Justice Muhammad Ibrahim (1898-1966) who earned the unique distinction of shouldering the burdens of various important and high official positions in succession. He lectured on law at Dhaka University and later held the offices of public Prosecutor, District and Sessions Judge, Judge of the Dhaka High Court, Vice-Chancellor of Dhaka University and Central law Minister of Pakistan. His career and Achievements combined the multifarious activities of a lawyer, academician, jurist and a politician. He was secular in his outlook and fought tirelessly for the democratic participatory rights of the Bengalese of the region. The book through the pen of different eminent writers portray graphically the eventful career and the different aspects of the life of Justice Muhammad Ibrahim which encompasses many epoch-making incidents and vital aspects of national life which are inextricably linked with the history of Bangladesh.]

[Since 1962 indigenous Mandi Peoples' of Modhupur forest Area are fighting for their land rights without any effective support from external sources outside of their own community. The limited support that they received in the past was mainly solidarity support. There are number of studies have been published for academic and other purposes both from home and abroad. However most of the studies have focused on the anthropological and environmental aspects. Hardly any of these studies have dealt with the international human rights instruments that are applicable for the indigenous Mandi Peoples'. In such context this is one of the first publications which has recognized the legitimacy of the indigenous Mandi Peoples' struggle for survival in Modhupur forest area that is also in line with both domestic and international laws, in particularly the international human rights convention, covenant and treaties in which Bangladesh is the state party.]

[Written in 1971, but not published till a decade later, the Crooked Neem Tree narrates the story of Seema, a young Punjabi girl growing up in East Pakistan in the early sixties. Despite her sheltered life, Seema Gradually becomes aware of social injustices and personal betrayals, initially through the experiences of her friends. She falls in love with Tanvir, a young "Bihari," but becomes engaged to Qamar, a Punjabi cousin, when Tanvir breaks off their relationship. Learning that Qamar was responsible for a friend's unhappiness, she ends the engagement and turns to Khalid, a Bengali student she meets at university. However, she has never stopped loving Tanvir, as becomes heartbreakingly clear to her and Khalid at the end. A Moving portrayal of a sheltered young women's life, The Crooked Neem Tree also provides a vivid account of the political and social undercurrents and the growing unrest of the early sixties.]

[History of the family narrates the story of several generations of Sheikh Gul Mohammad, the former Ghumman Mal of Bhera. Based on the genre of South Asian Family histories, the book combines fictional personal accounts with actual historical events to trace what life must have been like for a fairly well-off North Indian family during Mughal and British times. Occasionally courtiers and soldiers, occasionally clerks and civil servants – and once even a holy man – the family knows several changes of fortune as the sword of Hussain, given to Sheikh Fateh Mohammad by the Mughal courtier Mirza Rasul Beg, is handed down through several generations to finally disappear in 1971. Sometimes nostalgic, often humorous, history of the Family should be read by anyone interested in the history of the subcontinent and in the lives of ordinary people who make up the often unrecorded part of that history.]

[This volume consists of 26 columns published earlier in various leading dailies between the years 2004 and 2006. The need for publication of the columns was felt because of the almost unending debate on religion-based militancy. The major political parties did not fail to have polarized views on the issue based on politics of denial and politics of confrontation. The media and the civil society, on the other hand, contributed to a more informed understanding of the much-debated subject of terrorism. The dispassionate analyses present not only the 'how' and 'why' but also what should be the future direction from the perspective of governance.]

While this book acknowledges the country's accomplishments, it also shows that the aspirations and potential of the Bangladeshi people have been thwarted by a fragile political and administrative system. It identifies the underlying conditions that have shaped the country's post-independence institutions, processes and leadership. The book also offers suggestions for rectifying these institutional deficiencies to enable Bangladesh to achieve its full potential.]

[The book starts with the investigation of the changing relationship among the communities therein from the past until the incidence of violence in the post-parliamentary election held in 2001. The violence in fact is a form of relationship. The violence was observed throughout the country for six months since election under four broad heads-action and property related violence, psychological abuse, and physical assaults including rape and murder. The major part of the study was directed towards the cause of violence and it was sought in a multidisciplinary explanation.

This excellent qualitative and quantitative research combining both field observation and conceptual explorations should attract a wide range of readers particularly those dealing with social problems and will come to regard this book a bold and pioneering work on the issue in Bangladesh.]

there must be further investigation and critical analysis in these areas. However, these at least show how freaky the footing of Bangladesh is on policy matters.]
