Bangladesh has recently turned out to be an intriguing model of economics. It warrants faster growth to help the economy achieve the next level of development. The book argues how macro policymaking and institutions can empower growth to make this graduation possible. This work shows how the market economy along with the spirit of liberalization has energized Bangladesh to be a growth story and how further reforms and apt investment strategies can make the country's development sustainable in the twenty-first century. The book shows how monetary instruments adjust to fiscal targets and argues for better coordination between monetary and fiscal policy. While a gradual improvement in investment may not prove effective to accelerate growth, an investment blitz must be carried out through even outsourcing the management if needed. The benefits of the demographic dividend will fizzle out in 30 years, hurrying up the need for rapid building of infrastructure and energy facilities. The book is different from a typical publication on the Bangladesh economy. Its unique organization turns out to be a pleasant collection of economic stories mingled with experiences and anecdotes that engage the readers of diverse backgrounds. Its argumentative style would be motivational and thought provoking for stakeholders and policymakers who strive to empower growth in a sustainable manner. This work stands out to be a handbook of investment strategies, macro policies, and institutions - which the author thinks are most appropriate for accelerating growth in a vibrant Bangladesh.

Climate change is a global phenomenon being experienced by all levels of society, and in different types of ecosystems. It can have adverse impact on food security, water supply, and livelihood among others, especially for the poor and more vulnerable sections of human society. This book explores theoretical frameworks, adaptation strategies and local knowledge and provides an overall state of climate change research and up-to-date knowledge of climate change issues in the context of Bangladesh. It aims to provide insights, lessons and perspectives on how Bangladesh is dealing with the impact of climate change by drawing on the experiences and lessons shared by representatives from research centres, development agencies and academic institutions. It also takes into account the crosscutting issues contributed by natural and social scientists and other experts in the field. This book is invaluable to all interested in assessing research gaps in climate change studies in the context of Bangladesh and other parts of South Asia, identifying future research areas, drafting effective policy agenda and implementing critical activities at the local, national, and international levels.

National Trials of International Crimes in Bangladesh: Transitional Justice as Reflected in Judgements / M Rafiqul Islam

In this book, Professor Islam examines the quest of Bangladesh for transition from its violent past to the peaceful future through judicial trials of atrocities committed during its liberation war in 1971. These international crimes trials, held under a domestic legislation, are uniquely distinct from international or hybrid international crimes trials. The book is a ground-breaking research work on the first ever such trials in the ICC era. It comprehensively analyses the hardcore legal issues contested in the tribunals and their judicial expositions reflected in all trial, appeal, and review judgments delivered as at the end of 2018. The author shows how the national law and judgments can be a conduit to import international law to enrich and harmonise the domestic law of Bangladesh; and whether the Bangladesh experience creates precedential effect for such future trials, offers lessons for the ICC complementarity, and contributes to the progressive development of Asian and international criminal jurisprudence.
