Suzi Koray Hanson is a Mediterranean woman. She is a torch of struggle always burning. She is a staunch role-model personifying the saying, "what a woman can achieve if she wants to". At the time her book came into being, she was a life-partner, a wife. Tears of joy she shed in enthusiasm for her book mixed with the bitter tears of grief for losing her life-partner. Climbing the challenging ladders of life without getting stuck in the problems, she, as a solution-oriented person, walks along the path of life by solving those problems one by one. Problems cannot withstand her.

In this context, Pakistan Here and Now: Insights into Society, Culture, Identity and Diaspora — a volume of essays edited by poet and essayist Harris Khalique and development practitioner Irfan Ahmad Khan — is a welcome arrival. With its self-describing subtitle, the volume comprises seven essays on topics ranging from cinema, censorship, curriculum, music, history and poetry that collectively take a long view to understand how historical and political developments — and accidents — have shaped Pakistan's culture.

The contributors hail from various disciplines — media, academia, development, gender studies — and each essay has a lively, distinct voice. The essays leap from academic theorising to anecdote, historical narration to personal reflection, and readers are better off abandoning expectations of a traditional edited volume. Instead, the book should be thought of as an opportunity to join a conversation, as the writers seem to speak to each other across their contributions, common-minded friends seeking to provoke each other xxvi, 654p.

Dilemma of Democracy – 1 : Pakistan Under Benazir Bhutto, 1993-1996 / Najam Sethi

9789694026534

$ 60.00 / HB

Both Benazir Bhutto and Nawaz Sharif didn't acquit themselves well in the "trial of democracy" from 1988 to 1993. They did worse confronting the "dilemma of democracy" from 1993-1999 - how an elected government can complete its five year term and also provide a level playing field to the "government-in-waiting" to turn the tables at the end of the period. In consequence, Pakistan was driven straight into the jaws of martial law in 1999. This volume traces the rise and fall of the second Bhutto regime from 1993-96. It records how, through the good offices of the Establishment, she began on a conciliatory note with Nawaz Sharif by offering to nominate a consensus candidate (Wasim Sajjad) as President in exchange for jointly undoing the notorious Clause 58-2(B) of the 8th Constitutional Amendment which hung like the sword of Damocles over every prime minister. It tracks the negotiations to breaking point, compelling her to nominate her "own man", Farooq Leghari, to the Presidency. It records Nawaz Shun cunning ways to drive a wedge between Leghari and Bhutto, which eventually led the former to use the 8th Amendment to sack the latter. The major policy issues that preoccupied Benazir Bhutto in her second term were nuclear proliferation, MQM terrorism in Karachi and conflict in Kashmir. The book explains how the US applied economic and military sanctions to pressure Pakistan to cap, freeze and roll back its nuclear programme but failed to achieve its objective. It details how she successfully tackled and put down MQM terrorism through effective use of civil-military power. And it records how she teamed up with the military to promote jihad in India-Occupied Kashmir. The book is about foul play by both Bhutto and Sharif; foreign policy blues; warlordism in Afghanistan; mythology of Mohajirism; nuclear policy; Mehrangate; General Mirza Aslam Beg's "grand plan"; threat of an India-Pak nuclear war; journalists for sale; pains of privatization; Indo-Pak relations; doctrine of necessity; corruption and Surreygate. The analysis covers the mind of Benazir Bhutto, her Achilles heel and fatal flaws. It is indispensable reading for the student of history who wishes to understand how and why democracy failed to take root in the 1990s.

$ 30.00/ PB

296gm.

Dead Man's Prisoner is a fascinating novel by a former provincial bureaucrat of Khyber-Pakhtunkhwa (KP) province. It addresses the despicable tribal tradition of Sawara where young girls are married off into a hostile family to end a blood feud. In such societies, the women end up bearing the brunt, as they have through millennia, to save their families from sure destruction at the hands of ruthless enemies. Young girls and women thus become sacrificial lambs at the altar of towering egos and man-made traditions.

The book covers the myriad hybrid threats that Pakistan faces daily and provides recommendations for dealing with these threats. It will thus educate the readers in general, and the policymakers in particular, enabling them to arrive at more prudent decisions about Pakistan's national security. The book begins by explaining the evolution of war over generations and the rise of hybrid warfare to the central stage, then gives leading international perspectives, laying out its strands and domains for study. The hybrid war against Pakistan has been explained in detail, as the geopolitical context of the conflict, and how the Thucydides Trap induces further conflict. Also, concrete recommendations have been formulated at the geostrategic, national and military levels to tackle this hydra.

The human rights violations in Indian illegally occupied Kashmir must be immediately stopped. The gigantic and massive struggle of Kashmiris against Indian aggression has obligated the Indians to use blind force and impose an indefinite curfew in most parts of Kashmir. Eminent British philosopher Bertrand Russel had expressed his despair on the Indian aggression in Kashmir. Eminent American Professor William W. Baker wrote a comprehensive book titled "Kashmir: Happy Valley, Valley of Death." He unveiled the gruesome face of Indian hypocrisy and aggression on the issue of Kashmir.

SUFISM is sincere inner directedness to wards God to understand the soul. It is an experience, which transcends the rational theoretical concepts of philosophers, theologians, esotericism and outward knowledge of the world.

The Prophet (PBUH) said, "Everything corrodes or oxidizes including the heart and the polishing of the heart is by Zikr-Allah (Remembrance of God).

The people who practice Tausawaf follow the Sunnah, get inspiration and guidance from Quran, inculcate in themselves Prophetic qualities and practices, which ultimately leads them to spiritual psychosis i.e. disciplining the soul, purification/illumination of the heart.

"If someone wants to develop friendship with Allah in our age, its cost - instead of passing the whole life in retreat - is a struggle to transform the social fabric through a revolution." Dr. Hussain Mohi-ud-Din Qadri.

Rooted in Quran and Hadith, the values and teachings of Islamic civilisation are often antithetical to the values of the modern era. In an attempt to reconcile the two and paving the way for Islamic values to exist in a modern and dynamic society, Dr Hussain Mohi-ud-Din Qadri demonstrates the need for revolution on both a societal and political level. Tracing the socio-political and economic aspects of revolution, he employs a Quranic framework to demonstrate the need for perceptive and innovative leaders like Shaykh-ul-Islam Dr Muhammad Tahir-ul-Qadri, whilst detailing the role of Minhaj-ul-Quran in tackling contemporary issues. He delves into the Quranic justifications for revolution, providing historical examples and their significance in the duty to bring socio-political cohesion. This book is a roadmap of revolution, its Islamic premise, and its modern application.

$ 35.00 / HB

306gm.

This book aims to illustrate that Islam is not an antithesis of science, philosophy, education and the pursuit of knowledge. Rather, throughout the history of Islam, education has remained the primary objective of every Muslim. This led to a flourishing and rich civilization that lasted 1000 years, bountiful with thought, philosophies and wisdom that still influences millions today.

This book looks at different debates between various schools and Muslim philosophers on God's authority, miracles, afterlife, human freedom, sufism, time and space, causality, knowledge, unity of being, and the beginning of the universe, showing the vast and rich history of knowledge within Islam.

Then it leads into the contemporary era, explaining the thought of Dr Allama Muhammad Iqbal and Hassan al-Banna, and explores the works of Shaykh-ul-Islam Dr Muhammad Tahir-ul-Qadri, his philosophical approach to education, change, counter-extremism, economics, political philosophy and social welfare.
