Phnom Penh : Reyum Publishing, 2003

$ 36.00

[For the last two years, a team of Reyum researchers have been interviewing elderly Cambodians about their lives in order to compile a Memory Bank of everyday life in late 19th and 20th Century Cambodia. For this particular book, the researchers have focused on the topic of clothing and longstanding habits of bodily care found in Cambodia before modernization. The book details traditional types of cloth and clothing, ways of cutting, sewing, and keeping clothing, as well as habits of beauty and care used prior to the advent of readymade manufactured products.]

Focusing on Cambodia's High Value Forests : Livelihoods and Management – Special Report / Bruce McKenney
Phnom Penh : Cambodia Development Resource Institute & Wildlife Conservation Society, c2004 120 p.; 30cm.
ISSN : 1560-9197
$ 20.00

[High Value forests (evergreen and Semi-evergreen) are one of Cambodia's chief national assets. Compared to other forests, evergreen and semi-evergreen tend to offer greater commercial potential for logging interests, hold higher levels of biodiversity, and provide higher proportions of forest product income to local communities. Given their commercial value, it is not surprising that evergreen and semi-evergreen areas face a great threat of deforestation than other forest types. Indeed, commercial logging has sharply reduced the amount and quality of these forests across much of southeast Asia.

With a focus on high value forest areas in Preah Vihear, Kompong Thom, and Mondulhiri, this study examines the magnitude and characteristics of forest dependence, the status of key forest resources and competition for these resources, and the relationship between actual local use/management and official rules and regulations. In addition, a number of management scenarios are analysed to shed light on how different approaches affect the amount and distribution of timber rents and other logging impacts. The study seeks to provide a deeper understanding of these livelihood, resource, and management issues as a basis for developing more effective strategies for achieving poverty reduction and rural development.]
