The pictorial representations on Cambodian silk textiles are unique in mainland Southeast Asia. Many of the few surviving antiques textiles of this genre visualize, in astounding detail, Theravada Buddhist themes and are a response in silk to similar depictions in other artistic media also used in community religious practice. The imagery of another genre of pictorial textiles springs from a different source and is distinguished by the iconography of a bird, snake and tree of life. In addition some of this group, have illustrations of ships ranging from realistic to arcane. Latest research suggests that these pictorial textiles represented celebrations held at the end of the rainy season in Cambodia.

Textile expert Gillian Green illuminates many facets of these spectacular cloths. Assembling for the first time a comprehensive collection of pictorial textiles from private and public collections, many hitherto unpublished, the reader can revel in the wealth of cultural references encoded in the patterns.

The history of Cambodian dance, the role of the French in introducing the dancers to the west, the paintings of dancers by Auguste Rodin, the Reamker epic from which many of the dances are drawn and the stories of dancers who survived the dark period in Cambodian history to revive classical dance today are all related in this fascinating book.

Profusely illustrated with many old photographs and drawings, the book also discusses Khmer music, shadow puppetry and the future prospects for the Royal Ballet of Cambodia, which in 2003 was proclaimed by UNESCO to be a masterpiece of oral and intangible heritage.
