Cp open biennale 2003 : Interpellation

Jakarta : National Gallery, 2003

[CP Foundation is an independent Indonesian – Washington based arts institution which was founded in 2001 with the objective to contribute to the widening of the world's art platform. The foundation envisions a world art scene in which democratic principles can flourish and plurality is possible in a dynamic that is inclusive instead of exclusive.

To this end, its art facility, the CP Artspace at 1350 1-Street in Washington DC has exposed mostly Asian, but also Latin American and Iranian contemporary art works to the international forum.

After two years of organizing exhibitions in Washington D.C., the Foundation is expanding its endeavours by organizing the CP open Biennale 2003, the first of its kind ever. Following the Foundation's democratic concept, CP Open Biennale, a combination of art biennale and art competition, recognizes the value of locally colored cultural legacies in contemporary art.

The foundation is supported by a group of Indonesian companies while the Open Biennale also enjoys the support of Bank Indonesia, UBS, and the Friends of the Foundation.

The founders of CP Foundation are Tijanan Djie – an Indonesian entrepreneur who has had a personal passion for art and Jim Supangkat a noted curator who has been engaged in the rethinking of standard values in world art ever since he was an arts student and a proponent of the Indonesian New Art Movement in the early 1980s.]

Indonesian Historiography / Sartono Kartodirdjo
Jakarta : Penerbit Kanisius, c2001
191 p.; 21cm.
979-672-908-3

[Human communities become civilization as soon as they possess historiography, symbolizing time consciousness on the one hand and self-identity on the other. This also holds true as regards nationhood, with respect to national consciousness and to self-existence. Therefore it is not exaggerated to say that national history is a symbol of national identity and the national history plays an important role in national education in particular and nation building in general. The historian should do his utmost when writing and teaching national history. On the one hand, objectivity in constructing national history must be observed, while on the other hand, historical criticism must be included.

This book is a collection of articles originally written as papers to be presented in international seminars between 1987 and 1998. It was a time when the Indonesian people was busying itself in nation building, providing an context in which writing national history was quite appropriate.]

[The workshop was the third in a series of meetings, which are part of the research program 'Indonesia in Transition'. The aim of the program is to analyze the turbulent changes taking place in Indonesia today from different academic perspectives. This program, which runs from 2001-2004, is financed by the KNAW and consists of four research projects in which Indonesian and Dutch scholars from various academic disciplines co-operate. 'These projects are (1) The Making of Civil Society in Historical Perspective, Which critically investigates theoretical key concepts, as well as the role of various Islamic Organizations and the formation of Political Movements at the Local level; (2) 'Rethinking Regionalism : Changing horizons in Indonesia 1950s – 2000s', which compares the 1950s with current developments, and conducts two regional studies in order to explore the often neglected decade following the Indonesian revolution; (3) 'The Experience of Crisis, Comparative Local and Historical Dimensions', which traces how people (have) experience(d) various manifestations of crisis in different places and periods and critically looks at discourses of 4 crisis' as well; (4) 'Indonesian Mediations : The Re-imagining and re-Imaging of communities in Transition'. Which explores the role of mass media in connection with representations of religious violence, regional identities, discourses on Islam and gender, and the role of cinema and radio in the shaping of new audiences, or 'mediated communities'. Within each of these projects senior researchers work together with Ph.D. students and visiting fellows.]

[When Soeharto was forced to resign as president of Indonesia, the economy was in ruins, and the country had to make the transformation to a democracy. Steps were taken to deprive the army of its strong political hold. The establishment of new political parties was permitted. Censorship was abolished. Political Islam began to make itself heard.

Nevertheless, the Reform Era which started in May 1998 did not bring the 'complete reform' demanded by student protestors. The burdens inherited from the Soeharto era proved heavy, and animosities between various ethnic and religious groups, even within the Islamic community, continued to characterize political and social life. Violent political confrontations and mass protests continued. Communal violence took on unprecedented forms.

This book traces recent developments in Indonesia, opening with the explosion of violence in the run-up to the general election of May 1997, and ending with the annual session of the Indonesian People's Congress in August 2000.

Kees van Dijk was born in 1946 in Rotterdam and studied social anthropology at Leiden University. He is affiliated with the KITLV as a researcher, and is chair professor in the history of Islam in Indonesia at Leiden University.]

[The Making of Ethnic and Religious Conflict in Southeast Asia is an anthology of conflict phenomena, their context and dimensions, and appropriate resolutions hermeneutically shared in the light of multi-dimensional approaches. Suggested methods for handling the various typical conflicts are in fact as important as for understanding their state of becoming. So to speak, this book is of course a theoretical but also a practical contribution for the very participation in peace-building efforts as these writers have deliberately shown in a number of experiences. This book is precisely dedicated to those who concern, experience and cognitively attached to the fact of civil war, self-determination conflict and fundamentalism, and at least, to those readers and practitioners without whom this conflict-laden region will still be burning by the fire of prejudice, anger and war.]

[This book discusses the history of the birth of BI's Independence and the dynamics of politics that follow it. Attention is also given to BI's attempts to carry out an institutional repositioning and to defend the central bank's independence amidst interventions by powers from "Outside". The Struggle became intricate as the socio-political setting of the transition to democracy was often unfavorable for the implementation of the central bank's independence – while at the same time, BI was demanded to perform in a way that is technically sound to provide a foundation for the attempts of economic crisis recovery.]
