[The book is a collective effort, some years in the making. Michael Hopes is an Australian anthropologist who has spent a total of two years living in Benuaq communities since 1991, doing research for a doctorate. Madrah is a Benuaq farmer and keen student of his own culture, without whose assistance in the work of translation and patient explanations this book could not have been contemplated. Karakng is one of the most eminent ritual practitioners of the healing and death ceremonies from which these myths have been taken. His knowledge of the tempu'n, and of Benuaq traditions more generally, is unrivalled.]

[I wrote this book based on my motto for years. "Celebrating birthdays means looking ahead." In my speeches and writings connected to anniversaries of educational institutions which I chaired, of the country, or of the armed forces, I always started with an invitation to look ahead into the future. Even if we have to look back, we should do so only to learn the lessons from past experiences in order to better prepare ourselves for the future. As a country, we are still considered young. However, sometimes there are already symptoms of untimely aging in various commemorations in our country, where we are imprisoned by our nostalgia of the past that we idealize and romanticize. Therefore, I repeatedly emphasize the motto: "Celebrating an anniversary means looking ahead."]

[The dominant role of the Indonesian military has long been a characteristics feature of the Indonesian political scene. But how did this dominance emerge? In this book Dr.Salim delves into the circumstances of the Indonesian military's inception during the struggle for independence in the 1940s and the perceptions of its first commander-in chief or panglima besar, General Sudirman, to answer this question. In this view, the fact that the military was a self created institution rather than one established by the government or a political party, the fact that General Sudirman was elected by his troops rather than by the government, the weakness of indigenous political and governmental institutions at that time, and the experience of running a military government for eight months during the guerilla war period led to the panglima besar's perception of the military as the main defender of the country's sovereignty and to the consequent assertive role of the military.]

[This book contains a collection of my speeches delivered for international audience. they cover wide-ranging topics, from terrorism to poverty, tsunami to corruption, democracy to education, globalization to infrastructure, security to investment.

To achieve through these speeches is to define Indonesia's new thinking and project the new spirit that emerged after the 2004 elections. A key challenge for my Government in our first year has been to translate the tremendous expectations, energy and optimism into real policy measures that will promote growth and stability. In the process of doing this, the inter-connection between our national objectives and international activities becomes stronger.]
