Lempad of Bali : The Illuminating Line / Bruce W. Carpenter (et al.)
(Chief Ed) Jamie James
Singapore: Editions Didier Millet, 2014
424p.
Includes Index ; Bibliography

$ 200.00/ HB
3880gm.

This is the first definitive and comprehensive study of Lempad's life and work by six leading scholars of Bali's art and culture. The book includes over 500 reproductions of Lempad's drawings from museums and private collections in Asia, Europe, and the United States.

At 424 pages the limited edition, large-format book is a groundbreaking work of discovery. Relatively few of the total of Lempad's drawings have been published and most of the early originals that survive have not been seen publicly since the 1930s when they left Bali to European and American collections.

Soemantri Widagdo, chief curator of the museum, principal organizer of the exhibition, and a co-author of Lempad of Bali, said, "We knew well before 2006, the museum's 50th anniversary year, that we must do the Lempad book and exhibition. But we also knew it would require years of research to find many of the works that left Bali 75 to 80 years ago in the years before the start of World War II

The hero Kadiroen, the son of a head village, is in the service of the civil service, and he performs his duties intelligently and diligently. He manages to solve a number of difficult problems and gets rapid promotion. However, after a while, he realizes that he can achieve far less than he would like, due to opposition from his colleagues and mistrust by the population. This results in a deep personal crisis. He then becomes acquainted with communist ideas about economy and society; he feels the pull of such ideas and while still working as a government official, he begins to write articles for the Communist Party's daily articles which cause the newspaper some trouble with the authorities. After careful consideration, Kadiroen decides to resign from his position in the civil service so that he can devote himself entirely to his job as a journalist in the service of the People's Movement. Thus, he finds the spiritual peace he has sought. Alongside this story of the hero, a story unfolds about Ardinah, with whom Kadiroen falls in love in the course of his duties as a civil servant. The heroine manages to free herself from her marriage to the despised and cruel head village with the help of comrades in the Party, she is eventually able to marry Kadiroen.
