The Religion of the Tempasuk Dusuns of North Borneo / I H N Evans
Kota Kinabalu : Opus Publications, 2007
First Published 1953
xxviii, 604p.; 22cm.
978-983-3987-23-8
$ 62.00

The Religion of the Tempasuk Dusuns of North Borneo, which was first published in 1953, is one of the most important books written about the Dusun of the Tempasuk district, one of the numerous ethnic groups in Sabah (formerly called North Borneo). It is based on the author’s fieldwork in the early 20th century and in the pre- and post-World War II periods when he lived amongst these people.

The book gives a very comprehensive account of the Dusun’s general beliefs, beginning with their creation myth, as well as their ceremonies (agricultural, communal and personal). These are not mere text accounts of what the author witnessed at these ceremonies. More than 50 fascinating photographs of these ceremonies are included in the book, an appendix gives the texts of some of the rites. The third section of the book has 65 folktales of the Tempasuk Dusun, covering a wide variety of themes. Several are creation tales, others tell the story of origin of these people, while a number of the stories are morality tales.

Kota Kinabalu: Taste of Borneo 2007

300p.; 21cm

98342390 (?)

$ 38.50

This book is very much a compilation of the author's passions - the main ones being food and photography! What started out as a fun project for the author quickly turned into an all-consuming passion as she threw herself headlong into the brand new experience of coordinating with award-winning chefs and restaurants to put together a cookbook that explores all the different cuisine that can be found in Borneo. The author was privileged to rub shoulders with chefs from places as diverse as England, Australia, India and even from Kelantan and Penang in Malaysia. Some chefs featured here have even cooked for presidents and royalty

In the Propaganda war against the communist Party of Malaya(CPM), much was made of the fact that the party comprised ethnic Chinese- who adapted an 'atheistic' political philosophy. This documentary is a portrait of life in a tranquil South Thailand village, complete with Mosque, where the retired members live in exile. Recollections of the decades long guerilla war are interspersed with a fictional thai radio drama.

Traumas and Heroism is a book of two tales. The first is the traumatic story of a community living in complacent affluence being suddenly jolted from a comfortable, pleasurable lifestyle and literally thrown into an internment camp where the inmates barely survived an existence of filth, hunger and exhaustion aggravated by the daily sadistic beatings, ill-treatment, and the constant fear of death from disease, malnutrition or cold-blooded massacre. Those who did not survive were buried on 'Boot Hill'—peace for some, while the graves of others were plundered for valuables. Those who violated rules and regulations or were perceived to be subversive elements were severely punished by the dreaded Kempeitai, the Japanese military police.

The second part of the story is that of man's intuitive heroic character, which was very much alive despite the regime of terror within the barbed wire fencing of the prisoner of war and internment camp. Under the very noses of their Japanese captors, a few British POWs with nerves of steel used their ingenuity and resourcefulness not only to build a radio, but also a generator to run it. News on the developments of the war (particularly setbacks to Japanese forces) provided much needed hope to the camp inmates.

Following the murder of Perak Resident James Birch in 1875, his pocket watch came into the possession of Mastura, a member of the Perak royal family. An intimate friend of the late Resident. Mastura was devastated by his death and decided to keep the watch as a talisman against the uncertain times ahead. She vowed to return it one day. This is the story of Mastura and her descendants, as she and her family made their way through 80 tumultuous years of British rule in Malay until, with Independence, the talisman could finally be returned with honour. It is a story of courage, fortitude and faith. And of love.

This is a significant collection of essays on recent tumultuous political developments in Malaysia written by a scholar who is proving to be one of the most perceptive observers of the intricate politics of the country and the complex intermeshing of social, cultural and economic issues with political events and happenings. There is also a salutary warning for the country and Malaysians on what the costs are when silence from the top is the main political strategy and public response in dealing with national issues of pressing importance remains weak.
