[The Study of the Religion of Christian Filipinos has fallen prey to the notion that religion and Church are one. The Christianity of the poorest Strata of Tagalog Society in Eastern Laguna Province is discovered to have little to do with the Roman Catholic church as an institution, however. The Samahan thus becomes an arena wherein ideas about unity and coercion, about the meaning of tradition and religion, and about the oppression of those Tagalogs who call themselves oppressed are debated, thought about, and enacted. The grammar whereby assent is given or withheld is analyzed in detail ; the ideas, expressed through action within the samahan, are interpreted on the assumption that this is what the religion of these Tagalogs is – the social acts of a single class of people working together to symbolize their everyday experience.]

The Song from the Mango Tree : A Manobo Raconteur Introduces his repertoire of oral Literature with a favourite Trickster Narrative / Hazel J. Wrigglesworth and Ampatuan Ampalid

[The Song from the Mango tree presents a selection of five narratives from the oral narrative repertoire of Ilianen Manobo raconteur Ampatuan Ampalid. The narratives are in diglot form with English translations done directly from performances by the Manobo traditional storyteller in his own language. Comparative notes are provided, illuminating the oral literature classifications (according to Aarne & Thompson classification of world oral Literature) and the diaspora of the narratives.]

[In his book Towards a Political Economy of information, Roberto Verzola takes a well argued position that the new information and communication technologies (ICTs) and information highways they are creating will affect us in the same way as the logging road in the story he tells above. ICTs and the Internet do have a dark side, as Verzola clearly points out.

Policy-makers, educators, parents as well as students must read this book especially if they intend to invest huge amounts of money, resources or time in these technologies. When a phenomenon is one that can completely change our lives and those of our children and grandchildren, we must look at it from different perspectives. We need, at the very least, a second opinion. What this book offers is a very well-argued second opinion that reveals the dark side of ICTs and suggests ways to cope with it.]

1. Philippines – Rural Conditions

[This book provides snapshots of issues in contemporary Philippine rural society set against the changes that transpires from the 1920s to the 1990s.

Focusing on microlevel conditions in communities in Antique, Cavite, Dalaguete, Negros Occidental, Nueva Ecija, South Cotabato, among others, the case studies reveal the complex interrelation of population movements, economic underdevelopment, state inefficacy, environmental degradation, and peoples' Survival strategies.

Concentrating on the poor in denuded and non-irrigated areas with low levels of agricultural production and fisherfolk facing a depleted fishery resource, the case studies narrate various means of coping with poverty in a degraded environment. These survival strategies, however, reflect the limits of household efforts. It is thus imperative to undertake collective and macrolevel actions beyond the uncoordinated decisions of individual households to break out of the impoverishing effects of erratic growth cycles and address the intergenerational character of poverty.]

[The Philippines and the Marianas share a colorful historic past. With their inhabitants already sharing similarities even before the coming of West, the link between the two archipelagos became more pronounced with the arrival of Spanish colonizers. Both are now named after Spanish royalty, the Philippines after King Philip II and the Marianas after Queen Maria Ana.

During the period of Spanish colonization, natives of the Philippines were sent to the Marianas as soldiers, catechists, and servants of the missionaries. Some of them distinguished themselves in the colonization effort while others died in the cause of evangelization. Later settlers, craftsmen and exiles were sent to the islands. The sending of natives of the Philippines to the Marianas was an answer to Spain's need to sustain its imperial objectives there. Nevertheless most of the Filipinos readily adapted to their new home and became part of the island society.

This book attempts to tell the story of the people of the Philippines who went to the Marianas during the Spanish period and the early American period. Using both primary and secondary source materials, it hopes to present a picture of the life of those Filipinos and their legacy in the far islands of the Pacific.]

[This book describes a vibrant Japanese community that was fully engaged in northern Luzon economic, cultural and civic life in the first decades of the 20th century. Because of the great toll on Filipino life and society in the second world war, most of the stories here came to be shared only within small groups of Japanese-Filipinos. Few of their elders, the pioneers’ children, now remain. Through Oral accounts, archival research, and over 300 previously unpublished line drawings and photographs, this volume retrieves for us a portion of Baguio and Cordillera history that has come close to being totally forgotten.]

The Philippines Under Spain : A Compilation and Translation of Original Documents : Book III (1572-1583) All the Kings’s Men / Edited by Virginia Benitez Licuanan

xxv, 557 p.; ill.; 28cm.

Includes Index.

$ 40.00

[This book is the third of the series entitled “The Philippines Under Spain,” a compilation of documents covering the entire Spanish regime in the Philippines from the voyage of Magellan to the revolution against Spain.

This third book, “All the King’s Men,” contains the “Meritos Y Servicios.” the service records of the members of the first colonizers, and letters and official reports of an on the first governors describing the major events and characteristics of their incumbency.

Following the theory that a government is only as good-or as bad-as the men who do the governing and that the character of a people is molded by the characteristics of those who govern them, a study of these documents that reveal the characters of the first Spaniards in the Philippines could thus explain the consequent effect on the people and on subsequent historical events in the Philippines.

However, it is not the intention of the editors to make historical judgments. Rather it is their chosen role to merely furnish the documents that could possibly lead history scholars to make plausible deductions and conclusions. But whether they read these documents in order to support a scholarly thesis or merely for private entertainment, the readers will be interested not only in the revealing idiosyncrasies of the officials in the Philippines of four hundred years ago, but will be shocked and probably be depressed by the similarity between then and now. The more optimistic point of view, however, is to believe that by studying the Past, one not only gets to understand the Present but, hopefully may be able to avoid repeating the same mistakes in the Future.

If they have in some small way contributed towards this end, the editors shall consider themselves well rewarded for many years of painstaking labor.]

The Philippines Under Spain : Reproductions of the Original Spanish Documents with English Translations : Book VI (1594-1602) An Interim Period / Edited by Virginia Benitez Licuanan

Philippines : The National Trust for Historical and Cultural Preservation of the Philippines, 1996

xiv, 421 p.; 26cm.

[This book is the sixth of a continuous series entitled “The Philippines Under Spain”, a compilation and translation of documents pertaining to the Spanish regime in the Philippines from the voyages of discovery starting in 1518 to the Philippine revolution against Spain in 1898, a span of three hundred eighty years.

The first book, “The Voyages of Discovery” deals with the initial explorations from the voyages of Magellan. The second book, “Conquest and Colonization”, deals with the Legazpi expedition and the first Spanish settlements. The third book, “All the King’s Men”, contains the service records of the first colonizers and letters and reports of an on the officials of the first organized Spanish government in the Philippines. the fourth book, “The Royal Audiencia” deals with attempts at colonial reform in the face of native unrest and includes all existing data on the first significant attempts by the natives to overthrow Spanish rule. The fifth book “Church Versus State” deals with the conflict between Governor Perez Dasmarinas and the redoubtable Bishop Domingo Salazar. Starting with this fifth book the original Spanish documents are published along side the English translations.

This sixth book, “An Interim Period” deals with the interim governorship of Luis Dasmarinas after the death of his father up to the regime of Governor Francisco Tello.]

[The essays in this volume show approaches to problems of utilizing literacy texts in revealing contingent realities about Philippine history. Each point of view or perspective is open to adventure. Each leads both scholar and critic right into the thickets and prickly brushes of literary and historical texts. In this way, they are able to identify the pivotal method and the literary subject they want to explore and resituate in a period of history. Such are the demands of a tinuha that interweaves literature and history.]

[This book is about Josephine Bracken's legitimate origin and her marriage to Jose Rizal. Authored by her great grandson, it is the first biography to come to her defense amidst allegations by historians that she was illegitimate and not lawfully wedded to the national hero. It presents Ms.Bracken's life before, during and after her brief but intense romance with Rizal who called her a wandering swallow (errante Golondrina). How she evolves into one of our history's unsung heroines is the fascinating plot of this narrative.]

[This book is about the Shari'a Courts and the code of Muslim Personal Laws (CMPL), best practices, gaps in the substantive law, problems in implementation in the areas pertaining to marriage, divorce, polygamy, property relations, financial provisions, custody, guardianship and child maintenance. The presentation starts with a discussion of the socio-political context. A portion of this study is about the actual usage of the substantive law to determine whether particular rights exist, are enjoyed and enforceable. A Study of the engagement of Muslim women and men in some Shari'a courts provides a picture of the status of enforcement of the CMPL and other trends. The places of study are Sulu, Tawi-Tawi, Basilan, Marawi, Cotabato, Maguindanao, Davao and all Muslim parts of Mindanao, Southern Philippines. Current Proposals for legal reform advocated by the National Network for Muslim Women's Rights are presented at the end.]

[This is the first collection of Sylvia Valdivia-Marfori’s articles to appear in book form since she started as columnist in 1995. The book is edited by Jose “Ting” Tiongco, M.D., foreword is by Fr. Poli Ty, S.S.S. and introduction by Fr. Albert Alejo, S.J. She has been writing under several pen names, SERAPHIM, for SunStar, EL MYRA for Weekender Magazine, I.IRENAEUS for Lamdag and has been using part of her name for the Philippine Daily Inquirer and the New Star. It is only now that she has finally decided to reveal herself to her readers. Her incisive, often biting puns laced with wry and cutting humor that characterize her writing, easily bring her readers to burst of laughter and merriment. But after the last echo of laughter has faded away, comes the bitter truths that most of her essays would reveal – on Politics, Economics, Business, Governance, International Relations and Theology. The author’s “coming out” so to speak marks a defining moment in Sylvia’s writing career. She aptly titled this maiden book of hers “Dare to Bare” – both a daring (going public) and a baring (as in baring her soul)]

Beyond Good governance : Participatory Democracy in the Philippines / Edited by Marisol Estrella and Nina Iszatt

xvi, 352 p.; 22cm.

971-8841-11-3

[This book brings together for the first time on-the-ground experiences in participatory governance of the Barangay-Bayan Governance Consortium. There are ten case studies featured, each with its own unique story and lessons to share. Yet collectively, they describe how people are changing the way they look at politics and their role in it. The Case studies provide ample material to explore, expand, and challenge concepts and discourse on "participation", "Good Governance", and "Empowerment". Participation in governance takes on new meaning, as ordinary citizens develop a personal stake in striving for genuine democratic change and transforming power relations and structures that perpetuate patronage, injustice, poverty and marginalization.

The book will appeal to readers interested in participatory processes and political change, including activists and local governance practitioners, policy makers, development professionals, and researchers.]

[Philippine Civil Society and the globalization Discourse presents the perspectives and positions of a particular segment of Philippine civil society that addresses and confronts the challenges of globalization. It examines the phenomenon as viewed by selected major civil society organizations that have so far been critical or at least wary about globalization. In doing so, the book provides baseline data for studies on the role played by civil society in the globalization discourse. It goes a step further by examining similarities and differences among closely held views and convictions professed by these selected organizations in order to better understand the globalization phenomenon as well as contemporary Philippine civil society dynamics.]

[This book tells the story of the Philippine legislature by examining the men and women who make up that body. It looks at their demographic characteristics (age, gender, education, profession), their assets and sources of wealth, and also their family lineage. What we found was troubling, but hardly new : Philippine legislators constitute a select and exclusive segment of society. They are richer, older, better educated, and better connected than the rest of us. Those who make the laws for the country are therefore hardly representative of its citizens.

This book also shows how lawmakers have employed their powers to further enrich themselves and entrench their families in power. The powers to make laws, to conduct legislative inquiries, to examine the national budget, and to vest presidential appointments have been used by legislators to get benefits for themselves, their allies and their kin.]

[From the Introduction : This book is divided into three parts. The first part is a reflection on the Resurrection of Jesus. It is a far from the technical studies and speculations offered by biblical and systematic scholars. The chapters try to unravel the power of the Risen Christ in transforming men and women. There is hope for sinful humanity! The second part dwells on the Ascension of Jesus. This is symbolically the “interim period” between the Resurrection and Pentecost. My focus is the process of formation used by the Risen Lord so that his disciples may be re-convened and prepared for the promised Advocate. There is hope for community! The third part is about the Holy Spirit sent on Pentecost. It leads us to an appreciation of the essential role of the Spirit in all of Christian life, especially in fostering communion and mission. There is hope for mission! An epilogue on Mary as the icon of hope will close the book. In her we have hope for hope!]

[The Global community is at Press Time, still reeling from the U.S. Terror Attacks. It is also watching with bated breath whether America will pay “An Eye for an Eye.” Christians everywhere ask : How does God’s Will fit into the Picture ?

The will of god and man’s response is the theme of this book. Drawing figures and events from scriptures and history, the author discusses God’s will – How to discern it and how to put it in practice. Intended originally to help you young people make that all-too important decision regarding a lifetime career or partner, the guidelines set forth could well serve the world leaders on National and International Issues.]

It is also a book the phenomenological-clinical approach and how it is particularly suited for research on children in pain. It includes papers by experts on this method and the research-therapists demonstrate how this method allows them to capture the actual experience of the children. In addition, each researcher narrates the inner journey she travels in the course of conducting her research.]

Various migrations drove them up and up the hills – and simultaneous with their passive resistance, the land of mindoro lost its abundant natural resources to poor stewardship by other Filipino settlers and foreign interests starting from the Spaniards and on to the Americans, the Japanese and finally the untouchable landlords. The study features statistics and maps – the first to show how the Mangyans became a minority and the latter to show Mindoro lost its forest cover.]

[Rulebook Women recreates for the present generation the images, obligations, and prospects of the 19th century Filipino women as delineated and dictated by a distinctive body of literature called books of conduct. Also known as rulebooks, the hybrid literary colonial period and thus functioned as a formidable tool for “character formation.”

Based on a survey of ten rule books, including Fr. Modesto de Castro’s best-selling protonovel Urbana at Feliza, the book scrutinizes the way women- were conditioned to think, act, feel, dream, and love according to the Christian virtues of chastity, moderation, obedience, silence, subservience, servility, sacrifice, and selflessness.

Yet, despite the prescriptions and proscriptions of Church and civil society, women were able to transcend their limitations, interestingly, by hewing to their roles and performing their duties while positioning themselves in spaces that they had redefined, or that had been defined for them by the exigencies of life in a colony in crisis.]
