[Food has always been a central part of Philippine life and culture. We eat to celebrate a birthday and to mourn a death. A fiesta is nothing without a long table groaning with food. We eat for religious reasons as well as profane ones. For us, eating is the ultimate social lubricant: we dine as easily with new acquaintances as with long-time friends, with those we hate as much as those we love.

Filipino diets, however, are changing, as convenience becomes the main consideration for choosing what to eat. Although we still prefer the salty and the sour in our food, we now want these in cans, or better and cheaper yet, plastic packs and sachets.

The dietary revolution that is taking place is wreaking havoc on our health. Filipinos are fatter now, but not healthier, And the prevalence of eating-related ailments ranging from diabetes to hypertension has become a social leveler.

But not all are created equal as far as food is concerned. While millions are stuffing themselves with the wrong kinds of food, millions more are going hungry, because of poverty and high food costs, more families are now subsisting on only one real meal a day.

So in this sense, too, food defines what we are: a society cleaved in two, the haves and the have nots, those who eat amid plenty and those who can barely eat.]

[Out of the Lions' Den is page in the development of capital markets in the Philippines. The incidents described made the general public aware of wash sales, matched orders, market rigging or jiggling, short swing, and short sales – terms which normally only stock brokers, traders and finance men, accountants, and lawyers will be conscious of. It was an expensive education that made greed costly for some and unjustly profitable for others.

In the Legislative Department, these incidents gave impetus to the enactment of the Securities Regulation Code. Respect for the rights of the majority stockholders was stressed, even as the minority was protected from oppression. The Securities and Exchange Commission was given broad, flexible powers even as governance of the stock exchange encouraged professionalism.

The Code likewise stressed the responsibility of the traders, the brokers, the accountants, and the lawyers. For laws do not guarantee honest dealings; only honest people do. That probably is the lesson of the book. Out of the Lion's Den can slaughter the lambs – or nurture the Daniels among our people.]

[Managing a Modern University in the Philippines was written by professors of the University of the Philippines who have served at various levels as administrators and managers in the country's premier state university. In this book, they share their expertise from many years of experience in dealing with issues such as faculty development, curricular reform, assessment of academic performance, strategic planning and management, fund-raising from donors, and several other aspects of running a major educational institution.

This book aims to advance the agenda of public higher education by stimulating discussions on much-needed reforms in that sector. This is a valuable source of information and ideas for anyone involved in education, particularly at the university and college level.]

[This book probes how corruption and commerce [or the pressure to rate or sell] have shaped media coverage of what is supposed to be the pivotal event in our democracy – elections.

Media corruption is not an easy subject of journalistic investigation. Still in a continuation of her ground-breaking expose on the ways in which journalism is corrupted by bribes and other inducements, Chay Florentino-Hofilena examines the new forms of media corruption that have emerged in the 2004 elections.]

 Media in Court : The Criminal Justice System : Guidebook for Reporters / Nes Barrameda

Philippines : Center for Media Freedom & Responsibility, c1997

x, 80 p.; 21cm.

971-91955-0-9

$ 8.00

[This guidebook aims to be a roadmap through the criminal justice system for practicing journalists and journalism students.

For most people, this could be a difficult but fascinating journey into an alien world that one only gets to enter either as an accused in a case or as a victim of injustice.

Increasingly, however, the public has recognized the paramount importance of the judiciary in the course of national affairs. It is now a broad constituency that seeks the free and unfettered discussion of the problems of justice and the barriers to its dispensation. Asserting the principle of accountability, the consensus supports public inquiry of those presiding in the courts and those supervising the course of justice. But it is important that this task be accomplished without eroding the public trust that must reside in the courts.]

[The 20th century : A Century of tumultuous events, a national growth and the maturing of the Filipino people. A century in which a country's fortunes rose and fell as we went through colonization and occupation, liberation and independence. A century of adversity and a century of triumph. At the turn of the Millennium, the Free Press recalls the Philippine Century as only the FREE PRESS can.

1900-2000 The Philippine Century is more than just a recapitulation of our nation's past. It is a book that identifies the personalities and issues, the events and trends, that mattered and made a difference in our daily lives, as seen and reported by the writers and artists that mattered : the distinguished roaster of FREE PRESS journalists and artists who were there to serve as the nation's conscience.]

[This book presents in broad strokes a chronicle of infrastructure development in the Philippines in the last 25 years. It covers the infrastructure experience across the Marcos regime to the Estrada (2001) and Arroyo (2003) administration. Its main objective is to flag the gaps and issues for future research, policy analysis and policy formulation. It calls particular attention to several constraints such as large budget deficits faced by the national government, inefficient government implementation of infrastructure projects, unclear policy and regulatory framework for private participation in infrastructure.]

[There is a water crisis, which is aggravated by a flawed governance of water resources. There is a need to empower local government units and communities to address the water crisis. This book presents a holistic analysis of the water situation that focuses on supply and demand conditions as well as on the social, economic, legal and institutional context of the problem. It argues for watersheds as the appropriate planning unit for an integrated water resources management system. It recommends pluralism in the modes in water governance in the country that will enable local stakeholders (LGUs, civil society) to evolve appropriate mechanisms in accordance with local social, political, economic and ecological realities. In sum, the book seeks innovative ways of trying to win the "water war" or of dealing with water scarcity and its related concerns.]

[This paper surveys the development of macro econometric and CGE models in the Philippines during the period 1990-2002, primarily in terms of their structure and applications. Many of the recent developments in macro econometric modeling have been incorporated in Philippine models. However, Philippine CGE models have hardly progressed beyond the standard neoclassical framework. Over time, there has been convergence in these two types of quantitative models: CGE models have increasingly used econometric estimates obtained from time-series data while macro econometric models have been applied to monitor social outcomes like poverty and income distribution. These quantitative tools have become an integral part of policy analysis in the Philippines.]

[The government has implemented substantial trade and investment policy reforms during the last two decades, following a three-track approach involving unilateral, regional, and multilateral modalities toward freer trade and investment. The reforms have resulted in improvements in domestic resource allocation, increased productivity, increased competitiveness of manufacturing industries, expansion of exports, and increased integration of the country in the global market. Yet, the growth of the industry sector, particularly manufacturing, has not been as robust as many have expected, leading some sectors to question the reforms. This requires some hard thinking even as it poses a great challenge to policymakers.]

[The message of the President's Budget for 2003 asserts that this year's budget supports the administration's vision of a strong republic that takes good care of its people and their future. The budget seeks to address the core needs of food, employment, education, health and housing. It also promises to provide funds and logistics necessary to ensure peace and order as well as eliminate graft and corruption. This study, however documents that the national government will again overshoot its fiscal deficit targets for 2002 and 2003 in this year's budget.]

[The book shows that the Philippines has achieved modest success in the area of poverty reduction and human development. Life expectancy has gone up, mortality rates have gone down, malnutrition prevalence has declined and School participation rates have improved. Poverty incidence has been reduced but the actual number of the poor has gone up due to the high growth in population. Moreover, spatial disparities remain large and some regions have lagged behind. The pace of improvement has also made it possible for other neighboring countries to overtake us based on the human development index.]

[This book focuses on the field of resource management and sustainability that is critical to agricultural management practices and development. It also gives premium to the institutional issues in the areas of property rights, land, water, fishery, and forestry, including an evaluation of the Comprehensive Agrarian Reform Program (CARP) and other tenure-related government programs. Certainly, the four main papers in this book are significant in that they present strategies for the policy, regulatory and institutional frameworks crucial not only in promoting but also in enforcing efficient, effective, equitable and sustainable agricultural growth for the country.]

[The Pacific region environment strategy (PRES) is the result of a regional technical assistance funded by ADB and the Government of New Zealand. The study covers (i) a review of key environmental issues and main response strategies in the Pacific, (ii) an assessment of past environment – related assistance provided by ADB and other development partners in the region to draw relevant lessons, and (iii) an identification of priority areas for intervention mapping out future directions for ADB's environmental assistance to the region.

This volume and an accompanying executive summary contain the main PRES findings and ABD's environmental assistance strategy for the Pacific. The PRES is part of a broader strategic planning exercise covering ABD's overall assistance to the region for the period 2005 to 2009. A second PRES volume documents case studies carried out to provide important field level context under the theme "mainstreaming environment in development planning and management"]

[In 1904, the Americans exhibited over 1,100 native Filipinos, including Negritos, Igorot, Moros, and Visayans at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition in Saint Louis, Missouri. Dubbed the "largest and the finest colonial exhibit," the Philippine Exhibition, though a huge success with the public, proved controversial because of its racist and imperialistic features, and the stigma it inflicted on Filipinos – a disgrace that is still felt after a hundred years. Mr. Fermin's impressive, well-researched book unearths new and explosive historical material pertaining not only to that fair but also to expositions held during American colonial rule in the Philippines.]

[This book analyzes whether the indigenous peoples' ownership and effective control over ancestral land and territories can be ensured with the interface of customary laws and state laws on land tenure and resource use within the Philippine legal system, and whether the Indigenous Peoples' Rights Act (IPRA), a legislation that embodies this plurality, can be fully enforced. It looks into the status of ancestral domain claims and the extent of IPRA implementation in Mindanao. This book also examines the rights of four indigenous groups over land and resources in specific areas in Mindanao that have been subject to competing claims by the state, mining and logging companies and other private groups.]

[Women of Tammuz completes A.G. Uianza's tetralogy of novels, Chronicles of the changing seasons, which is a creative rendition of the events of the last hundred years of the Philippine struggle to be free, to be truly independent, and to live in dignity and self-respect. Women of Tammuz is part of that broad fictional panorama recreated in her four novels through the eyes and heart of two families, showing with bold colorful strokes the most significant and, perhaps the most tragic moments of our history. Chronologically, Women of Tammuz is the second book of the saga, and with this novel, the four significant periods of our recent history are finally completely etched in their clearest details: the Philippine Revolution and the Philippine American War in A Passing Season; the horrors of war and the Japanese Occupation in Women of Tammuz; the evils and cruelty of a dictatorship in Bamboo in the Wind; and in Feast of the Innocents – the 'time of freedom and democracy' – what we did with this great opportunity to make of ourselves a people proud of its integrity and freedom.]

If we hold these novels up as a mirror of our own failed expectations, then maybe we will discover the answers to why we are poor, why we look to other lands for survival, and why loving this land is a supreme act of heroism.]

[From Foreword :

This report presents information on institutional Population and Institutional living quarters gathered from the results of 2000 Census of Population and Housing (Census 2000) conducted by the National Statistics Office (NSO) in May 2000. Institutional population constitutes that part of the total population who live in welfare institutions, hospitals, penal institutions, convents, seminaries, boarding schools, camps, Ocean-going and inter-island / coastal vessels, etc.

Information is vital in the efficient delivery of basic health and welfare services to institutional population. This report discussed the demographic characteristics of the institutional population, particularly on sex, age, marital status, religious affiliation, and disability. In addition, the type and number of institutional living quarters intended for habitation by large groups of individuals are presented.]

[The conflict in the Southern Philippines is becoming increasingly complex, and untangling the knots for a greater understanding of the problem is no easy task. Yet underlying all these manifestations of a complex conflict is a straightforward political-economic explanation. This study argues that the continuing war, the persistence of poverty and landlessness, and the emergence of "entrepreneurs in violence" are mere symptoms of something that has not yet been sufficiently addressed by a succession of Philippine governments or even by mainstream Moro revolutionary organizations the highly skewed distribution of ownership and control over land resources in the southern Philippines.]

[Inexorably a few more empires diminished in scope as the world moved toward the third Christian millennium. In 1997 the British Crown handed Hong Kong back to its original owners, China. Indonesia lost East Timor. And Portugal, too, relinquished its colonial hold on Macau, from where the image of our lady of piat, presumably crafted by local artisans or those from neighboring regions, journeyed to Cagayan river valley". Thus begins Yena Ngamin : The miraculous brown Madonna of cagayan river valley.

Conceived as an art book celebrating the 400th anniversary of our lady of Piat, it is still that and more: a panorama of a part of the world whose Liwan man could rival the Java man in importance. A glowing portrait of a province, a people, a country, a way of life. And an impassioned tribute to a heavenly mother whose love knows no bounds.]

[This is a book about a dialogue across continents and cultures, time zones and destinations. And the words are brave and beautiful, showing us that the countries and peoples of the south live in poverty, yes, but there is a certain nobility of spirit that no darkness can extinguish. This book will be helpful not only for the student of contemporary politics and economics of the developing world, but also for the keen observer whose eye is fixed on the multiplicity and diversity of cultures. It is book I recommend without reservations.]

[Moving on presents twelve inspiring stories of DAWN women returnees who have survived the odds as former entertainers in Japan. It talks about the realities of life... the push factors that drive women to work in Japan, the nature of their job as entertainers and the difficulties upon their return. How they managed to surpass the challenges and the lessons learned in the process were shared by the women survivors themselves by writing their stories for this book.

Moving on has both the Filipino and English versions of the stories for the benefit of DAWN's local and international networks.]
