A Handbook of Philippine Folklore / Mellie Leandicho Lopez
Philippine, Quezon City : The University of the Philippines Press, c2006
xxxiv, 481 p. ; 23 cm
Includes Bibliography and Index

$ 19.50

[Like her a study of Philippine Games (UP Press 2001), Mellie Lopez's A Handbook of Philippine Folklore is expected to be another landmark publication. The voluminous book provides a range of International theories and methodologies in analytical folklore investigations and a classification scheme based on genre is offered as the system of taxonomy for Philippine traditional materials. Lopez counts on the regional folklorists to refine the classification according to the texts of their respective areas. The different genres, too, are explained and examined in another part of Lopez's study. The reader will definitely find interesting and useful, the illustrative examples for each genre. Because the handbook is intended to be introductory, the author is optimistic about the future of Philippine folkloristics. Lopez believes that there is no limit to what the young and energetic folklorists can and will do for the future of Philippine folklore.]

[Mindanao Ethnohistory Beyond Nations: Maguindanao, Sangir, and Bagobo Societies in East Maritime Southeast Asia traces how the Maritime Southeast Asia tribal societies that prospered under the "Age of Commerce" had lost their autonomy in the course of modernization and became minorities. So far, the maritime world has not been fully described due to the limitation of written documents, the general tendency to follow national historical view. Focusing on that Southeast Asia world, this book attempts to present a new historical image by utilizing genealogy and oral tradition. Specially, this book looks into three societies: the Maguindanao society, which formed an Islamic kingdom and became the strongest force in Eastern Maritime Southeast Asia in the heyday of its power; the Sangir societies, which did not go beyond the small kingdoms; and lastly the Bagobo society, which remained a tribal society.]

[This book takes a hard look at the traumatic cultural changes that our planet's remaining hunter-gatherer societies experienced in the twentieth century, and the precarious future that is about to engulf them in the twenty-first century. The nine authors in this volume all agree that the foraging way of life, humankind's most successful adaptation for many thousands of years, has come to a close with the end of the second millennium.

Case studies are presented here looking at the past and uncertain future for post-foraging societies in Africa and Asia, and specifically the central African Pygmies, the San Bushmen, and the Agta Negritos. Interwoven with these chapters are emphases on tropical deforestation and indigenous human rights, looking at these through the framework of human ecology.

As Alan Barnard states, "If the human rights of proud former foraging peoples are given the attention they deserve, then there can be a bright future for them in Millennium Three. The task is not an easy one, but this book will help greatly to focus our attention on the issues that matter.]

[This book fills the gap in the history of Philippine art, Unaccountably, our cultural writers have neglected Fabian de La Rosa, though he dominated Philippine Painting- as both practitioner and teacher- in the first third of the twentieth century. It was the home- grown Fabian de La Rosa-rather than the European-trained Juan Luna and Felix Resurreccion Hidalgo-who brought to full flower the indigenous tradition of "vigorous genre pictures and elegant portraits" that had flourished in the nineteenth century. It is the exuberant and romantic Fernando Amorsolo who represents this era in the popular imagination, but a painting like Planting Rice (on the cover) shows off the crisp virtuosity of Fabian de la Rosa's more austere palette. The Publishers have done Philippine art history a signal service.]

The Lives and Loves of Artists and Models / Manuel D. Duldulao
Manila : Art Association of the Philippines, c2006
v. : ill ; 30 cm
$ 100.00

[Except perhaps for the Mona Lisa, we seldom pay tribute to the muses "behind the pictures" in the great museums of the world whose identities are un-known. Duldulao remedies this situation by traveling over the course of art history to identify these lovely and enigmatic women who overcame the paltry pay, drafty studios, the anguish of fatigue, and the public's prevailing prejudice against their posing nude, to provide the stimulus that enabled artists to produce their masterpieces.

The case of characters is large, but each one comes vibrantly to life. The diverse assemblage begins with Phryne from the fourth century BC to Helga Testorf towards the end of the twentieth century A.D. Through a series of startling revelations, the author tells their stories with an ease that moves freely in time and space, from antiquity to the present, from Athens to Paris, from Rome to New York, to give us a glimpse of what takes place within the privacy of the studio]

[Ethnical journalism cannot be divorced from competent journalism. The standards of competence and ethnics are not in conflict but support each other. Ethnics promotes all basic human values. The requirement of speed has to be balanced by the more important need for accuracy, for example: ethnical practice means journalists need to get it right and in time.

This manual is designed for those in practice-journalists who find themselves confronted by problematic situations during coverage and on the beat. Questionable practice has become the norm, unquestioned for its commonness. The manual is intended to help the journalist think out and clarify for himself or herself the dilemmas posed by situations that involve public safety, national security, privacy and the rights of children, women and other minority groups.]

[Filipinos Take the free flow of information and the abundance of news for granted, but appear incapable of making effective use of them. Preaching press freedom seldom rises above the level of a motherhood statement.

Despite the high profile given media personalities, many journalists remain vulnerable to manipulation and harassment, their freedom and lives subject to threats and tracks.

Public officials ban media critics from covering their activities. Judges are quick to declare journalists "in contempt" for negative reports on their decisions or their conduct. Mayors have ordered radio stations closed for alleged violations of business regulations, an excuse to silent strident criticism. More recently, President Arroyo's Proclamation 1017 authorized the unthinkable: the police takeover of the offices of a newspaper identified with the political opposition. None of these violations have provoked public protest.]

[In the main, the book probes into the way to the success of cooperatives in the context of two synergistic dimensions of cooperative operations: 1) the cooperative or human-related aspects and 2) the business or performance-related aspects. Strong membership support is considered the principal element of success.

Although the book does not pretend to provide a sure-fire prescription for success, it contains useful and valuable information that can open fresh and authentic insights into the potentials of cooperatives in the struggle against economic scarcity and social insecurity. Precisely because of its intertwined educational values and practical usefulness, the book can serve both as a textbook on cooperation for teachers and students particularly in the tertiary level, and a practical guide for cooperative officials and employees.]

v. ; ill. : 27 cm.

$ 100.00

[Coconut the Philippines Money Tree puts into vivid browsing materials that everybody knew but dared not to do about coconut, its many uses and its economic promise as well. From the lowly bunot which still polishes floors in many a countryside homes to the sophisticated and elegantly-packaged virgin coconut oil (VCO) containers, this book takes readers into a rich panorama of the amazing world of coconut. And while taking readers to virtual coco-filled adventure, it begs them to think of the realities and challenges as well as the future of the coconut industry. But whether it's promising or not, the decision is best left to the readers. One thing is sure though: after a refreshing browse of this hefty-yet-handly book, it is not difficult to make up one's mind.]

A Guide to Families of Common Flowering Plants in the Philippines / Irma Remo Castro Philippines : The University of the Philippines Press, 2006
xii, 199 p. ; ill. : 22 cm.
978-971-542-525-4
$ 15.00

[This book is an introduction to the science of plant classification and identification or plant taxonomy. It defines the terms used in describing a flowering plant and its parts and presents the characteristics of families of common flowering plants in the Philippines. For a clearer understanding, descriptions are supplemented by drawings and photographs. Plants commonly found in gardens, parks, and vacant lots are used as examples and, therefore, are readily available for study. A section has also been devoted to the establishment and maintenance of an herbarium.

It is intended for use by students, teachers, and plant enthusiasts who are interested in the identification of plants. The Philippines has an abundance and variety of plants, many of which are still undiscovered and unidentified, but there are very few Filipino plant taxonomists who can identify and make an inventory of these plants. This book hopes to stimulate interest in the subject and perhaps inspire some young Filipinos to go deeper into this field.]

[It is time to make sure that current and future generations will have the kind of stories that will be told and retold because they inspire hope, uplift the spirit, celebrate triumph over adversity and nurture a passion to be of genuine service to one's fellow humans. These are the stories of the Magsasay laureates, Asia's contemporary heroes and heroines.

This volume, the fifth in the book series Great Men and Women of Asia, focuses of twenty-nine Magsaysay laureates from the countries of Northeast Asia-China, Hong Kong, Japan, Korea and Taiwan. While each country has had a unique social and political history, all have deep spiritual and cultural roots in compassion and self-giving. Greatness of spirit has clearly had fertile ground in the region; the stories of our awardees reflect its diverse fruits.

The Roman Magsaysay Award foundation hopes that what may be seen today simply as a collection of touching stories about admirable persons from far-off lands will one day be the spark for other equally inspiring contributions to make Asia an even better place.]

["Myself, Elsewhere" is both an autobiography and a memoir of old pre-war Ermita. It is not the usual compilation of published essays, but entirely new and original material written in a few months in 2006. It covers the period between 1922, the start of what Nick Joaquin called Manila's "Most glittering decade" and 1945, the destruction of Manila. The gentility of pre-war Ermita makes for dramatic contrast to the brutality of the battle that destroyed it.

Writing at age 84 about her girlhood in Ermita before World War II, Carmen Guerrero Nakpil, offers both the innocent candor of the young and the worldly wisdom of old age. Using flashbacks and fastforwards, Mrs. Nakpil provides historical background and foreground to the highly personal account of her early years and family history. This book also describes the cultural frame, the manners, and morals, gossip and intrigue of a small Filipino town on Manila Bay during the first half of the 20th century and it does so with humor and also sorrow over its tragedy.]

[In the dynamic evolution of the Filipino, the Ilocanos as a regional group from the north have emerged distinctly and impressively. The Ilocanos, in fact, have shared their indigenous values, idiosyncrasies and lifestyles to all other Filipinos, here and abroad. Conversely, Ilocanos have assimilated themselves pretty well in the respective communities they have settled in.

The book, The Ilocos Heritage, aims to capture the essential Ilocano, delineating his roots, folklore, customs and traditions, arts and artisanship, temperament, and generally, his legacy as a whole. In addition, the book features the famous churches and tourist destinations in his region. A number of prominent Ilocano personalities are included as well in an attempt to appreciate what have shaped them as noble exemplars of a rich and proud history. Historical photos as well as contemporary shots further enhance the book, the first of its kind on the Ilocano people.

The four original Ilocos provinces-La Union, Ilocos Norte and Abra-are delineated. Each province boasts of its wealth of interesting data-from its history, to crafts to cuisine to literature to landmarks to outstanding or exemplary men and women. These four provinces rise to be acknowledgement in their united efforts to make the Ilocanos a one of a kind people. This book, therefore, pays tribute to all Ilocanos, by way of their original roots or affiliation or affinity. To all Ilocanos here and abroad, this is your book. Salud.]

[The Filipino diaspora is at least 400 years old. Since the sixteenth century, Filipinos have been going to foreign lands to find their place in the sun. In the beginning they were known as the Manila Men. It was only in the nineteenth century that they assumed their present identity as Filipinos.

For two-and-a half centuries, Filipinos by the hundreds traveled yearly to Mexico and the Americas, with many electing to stay and find a new life. The chief means for migration was the Manila galleon, also known as nao de China, that sailed between the Philippines and Mexico to carry on a lively trade in Asian goods in exchange for silver from the Americas and the trappings of civilization from the West.

The end of the galleon trade in 1815 did not stop the exodus of Filipinos to foreign lands as they began to discover the lure of other exotic ports in Asia and Europe. This book attempts to answer the question often asked: What happened to those Filipinos who started the diaspora? The answers are important because they fill a gap in the long history of this adventurous race.]

[On the Last week of November, 1574, nearly 6,000 men including a large body of supportive units led by the boldest pirate in the far East invaded the Philippines and tried to establish a kingdom- but failed.

This book tells his adventures in China and during the period of eight months that he was in Luzon as a hunted fugitive. It is a story of intrigues and deceptions; desperate battles and a secret mission; strategic blunders by the pirates and dissension in the Spanish command; and the escape which ruptured the relation between two government.

Read why captain Sioco with only 600 men landed in the wrong place and at the wrong time- how 55 men arrived in Manila and insured the victory for the defenders-why the Spanish-Filipino force could not launch a decisive attack to win at Lingayen- and how even the weather spoiled Limahong's battle plan and almost wiped out his escaping fleet.]

[This volume honors 11 Ateneo de Manila activists whose lives and deaths concretized the meaning of sacrificial and courage during the first decade-the most ruthless years-of the Marcos dictatorship. During this period the Ateneo de Manila found itself in the midst of a dark and highly volatile era. The stakes were naturally higher for Ateneo student activists committed to national liberation. This book memorializes the 11 young Ateneans who gave their lives for their convictions during those horrendous first ten years of martial law. In our hearts, we remember Ferdie Arceo, Bill Begg, Jun Celestial, Sorry Hizon, Edjop Jopson, Eman Lacaba, Dante Perez, Ditto Sarmiento, Lazzie Silva, Nick Salana, and Manny Yap, And with our remembering, we open a sacred space in our own lives for the mustard seeds of sacrificial and courage to grow abundantly, in the service of a nation chronically wracked by social suffering.]

Its relevant and extensive citations of case law here and abroad on how the judiciary in particular applied international instruments in resolving apposing claims of party litigants offer additional choice of mechanism to address rights that are legally demandable. Specifically, this brilliantly to address rights that are legally demandable. Specifically, this brilliantly crafted work may very well be a tool in the academe in research and project formulation of entities and individuals who endeavor to make CEDAW a tangible reality specially for the least informed sector of women whether citizens of women whether citizens of Philippines or on temporary sojourn. [The author describes the essays in this collections as "mongrels of a sort"-part personal essay and part literary commentary or criticism. "I would like to call them 'literary essays,' because they are about literature and because I hope they are written in a style which will make the reading of them as pleasant an experience for the reader as is the reading of other types of literature. I think they would fit under that larger category of creative nonfiction."

She describes what she wishes to do as "start a conversation with the reader, over a cup of ginger tea, as it were (or over a coffee mug or a glass of beer), much as I try to do with my students when I teach literature. I try to interest them in the stories which for different reasons have fascinated me all these years. And in doing this, I hope to come a little closer to understanding myself how literature does what it does, and why it is not likely to go away, though it might morph in strange ways, cease to be 'works' and become 'texts, 'relocate to cyberspace, become interactive, whatever,"

The conversations range over the narratives of several generations of women writers, from Maria Paz Mendoza and Edith Tiempo to F.H. Batacan and Tara Sering; and cover conventional realist novels and short stories, as well as fairy tales, chick lit, crime fiction, and war memoirs.]

[Textual Relations is a poet's eroticisation of reality through language, a process described in the past by Octavio Paz. Lovers brush against saints and beautiful suicides; gods, aging men and carpentry tools make love, Yahweh is the ultimate peeping tom, and even Pope John Paul II makes a guest appearance. Sexy, fun and irreverent, tragic and romantic, this book is a shrewd cocktail of pleasure and poetic truth, a juice-stained path into a garden of delights. And a snake. Don's forget the snake.]

[In Discipline and Democracy, Thompson and Macaranas demonstrate that Ramos, the twelfth President of the Republic of the Philippines, succeeded in pulling together a team that successively addressed the political, economic and social foundations of a nation for the new millennium, and achieved a target per capita income of the country well before its target date. While not a history of the Ramos administration, the authors examine most of its achievements and crises, tracing their roots in the leadership of a professional soldier, an engineer with a grasp of the larger social structure (a Protestant in a predominantly Catholic country) and a global picture shaped by a family steeped in diplomacy, and a practitioner of formally-learned management principles.

This book, a product of the Asian Institute of Management Policy Center, is akin to the "authorized" biographies of American President in recent years, whose authors have been provided privileged time and access to the highest levels of an administration's people and papers. These sources of information have been enriched with interviews of Philippines and global leaders who have come to know the signature FVT formula of people empowerment and global competitiveness for national development.]

[Stationary Bandits is an erudite man's incisive and perceptive look at political power. Elegantly written, it lays bare the myths and common deceptions that political ruling classes like to perpetuate on the citizens whom they consider their subjects. I am very much impressed. People living in democracies everywhere (not just in the Philippines) should pay close attention to Dr. Azurin's discussion of how politicians who acquire control of government tend to use the concerted power of the state to further their own interests and take advantage of the people. People still living in autocracies should read his ideas and consider how they might use these to possibly change their situation. Ultimately, for political elites everywhere, Stationary Bandits is a subversive book I recommended it highly.]

[While genuine agrarian reform has remained elusive to peasant and continues to be the main focus of peasant struggles in Asia and elsewhere in the world, the concept is currently being subverted by neoliberal globalization. So-called market-oriented land reforms and corporative land schemes have been introduced by multilateral institutions such as the World Bank and others and are undermining none other than the attainment of social justice. The main recourse for peasants is still their unity and strength to rise up against their corporate and comprador-landlord onslaught and put an end to imperialism. This book is a coordinated research project by the Asia Pacific Research Network. It contains Asian Peasants' experiences on land reform struggle-their lessons and aspirations.]

[Gahum is a Cebuano word for power and hegemony in and through which Macapagal-Arroyo's "end game" may be read, analyzed and opposed, as the word kontra (counter) designates. Macapagal-Arroyo's "end name" strategy against sectors and quarters that oppose her prolonged stay in power seeks to decisively defeat the "insurgents", especially the communists. But the spate of political killings of civilians and leaders of people's organizations has reached an alarming number of 744 since 2001, and this gives the term gahum its flavor as it is used in this book. This volume focuses on the three major dimensions of the dialectical relationship between state repression and the people's movement. The state, in this context, creates a semblance of banality in the midst of its malevolent violence to which it subjects critical citizens. Meanwhile, the people's movement, long engaged in counter-hegemonic praxiologies, strongly gains ground amidst the most barbaric and nervous conditions. Each chapter captures the ideas and sentiments of the authors into a thought-provoking and moving compilation that itself manifests the dialectics between the national democratic movement and the academe.]

This book of selected writings lays out the evolution of his thinking on Philippine social structure and societal change over forty years of active research, writing, and sharing poor people's lives. Applying sociological theory to the analysis of everyday social and political events, Carroll challenges the Catholic Church, elites, civil society, and grass-roots groups to attack and rectify the appalling imbalance of power and benefits in Philippine society. Fighting this battle-his War Zone-and winning it will help transform Philippine society from one whose elites control a political economy sustained by power and guns into one that upholds and defends equality, access, and participation for all.]

[This book is compilation of his most recent articles on Filipino migrants, their plight and untold misery under the age of so-called globalization. Using the right tools of sociological analysis, the book is dialectical discourse on imperialism and migration, colonial history and identity, the myths of assimilation, narratives of transmigrancy, and many more—all giving 'diaspora' and 'homecoming' a whole new meaning.]
