Chef Sharwin Tee has cooked all over the world, written a cookbook, and hosted his own cooking show, but none of it should have happened at all. Just ask him!

So, You Want to be a Chef? Chronicles his rollercoaster journey to a life he never anticipated. Full of hilarious hi-jinks, blown-up ovens, finger cuts, oven burns, and every other daily incident you can find in a kitchen, this book is definitely a delicious must-read, not only for those thinking about working with food, but also those who absolutely love it.

Politics

Strong Patronage, Weak Parties : The Case for Electoral System Redesign
in the Philippines / (Ed) Paul D. Hutchcroft
Mandaluyong City: Anvil Publishing, Inc., 2019

The current combination of electoral systems in the Philippines essentially guarantees the perpetuation of weak and incoherent political parties. As long as parties are weak and lacking in coherence, the primary focus of political contention is much more likely to be on patronage and pork than on policies and programs. As political reformers seek to address these fundamental problems of the Philippine polity, there is no better place to start than through a well-constructed set of changes to the electoral system. In this volume, expert contributors survey major types of electoral systems found throughout the world, explain their powerful influence on both democratic quality and development outcomes, and explore the comparative political dynamics of reform processes. A recurring theme is the virtue of a mixed electoral system involving some element of closed-list proportional representation--known internationally as one of the most effective means of building stronger and more coherent political parties. This, in turn, can be expected to encourage the emergence of a more policy-oriented (and less patronage-driven) polity.

Sociology

Revvig Up Research Innovations For Social Development : Methods and Perspectives / (Eds) Romeo B. Lee & Connie J. Maraan

The purpose of Revvig Up Research Innovations for Social Development is to share and disseminate some knowledge that the De La Salle University Social Development Research Center—in particular its research fellows—has developed in the course of its research productivity through the years. This knowledge pertains to some methods and perspectives in research innovation for social development, a theme that was chosen for this volume because it is germane to the conduct of research, and thus strategic for promoting research productivity among Philippine universities. More importantly, locally-based conceptualizations of research methods—in the way that these are led by Filipino researchers—are what are more needed toward developing coherent frameworks for social development research, and thereby for social inclusion, in the Philippines.
