$ 29.50

[The present organization of commodity chains, both small-scale and competitive, is favourable to a low-end price of food products. Yet due to a lack of farmers trade associations, contracts between farmers and traders, and information and control devices, quality and regularity of food supply cannot be guaranteed. Hence the economic opportunities in the domestic food sector could be improved by public support of the provision of information and the organization of the stakeholders in the agricultural sector.]

[Economic Growth, Poverty, and Household Welfare in Vietnam uses an unusually rich set of macroeconomic and household survey data to examine several topics.

These include the causes of the economic turnaround and prospects for future growth; the impact of economic growth on household welfare, as measured by consumption expenditures, health, education, and other socioeconomic outcomes; and the nature of poverty in Vietnam and the effectiveness of government policies intended to reduce it.

Although Vietnam's past achievements are quite impressive, future progress is by no means ensured. This book draws lessons for Vietnam and for other low-income developing countries. It is a valuable resource for anyone-including those in the development community, academia, and the media – who is interested in economic policy, poverty reduction strategies, health care, education, and social safety nets.]

[The province's industry occupies over 80 percent, and agriculture makes up only four percent. The activities of culture and society have been promoted to harmonize with the economic growth rate. Physical, cultural and spiritual life of people has basically improved. The urbanization is developing very fast, narrowing the gap between rural and urban areas. At present, Ba Ria-Vung Tau is situated in a seething economic development area of southern Vietnam. It is not only a centre of oil exploitation industry and oil-relating services but also a centre for electronics manufacture that consumes the greatest volume of fuel over the country. In addition to this, the province has developed tourist services. The exploitation and processing industry of marine products has developed. The sea harbor and large-scale marine services with various international marine lanes will develop in the near future. By the year 2010, Ba Ria-Vung Tau expects to become a famous tourism destination, a large-scale marine product exploitation centre, and a national and international commercial harbor.]

[The Review of Protected Areas and Development (PAD Review) examines the growing tensions between economic and conservation objectives in the four countries of the lower Mekong River region: Cambodia, Lao PDR, Thailand and Vietnam. It identifies the many development benefits flowing from protected areas and the need to reflect them in the plans and budgets of forestry, agriculture, energy, tourism, fisheries and other key economic sectors. The lessons of more than a decade of protected area management experience in the region are related to new and innovative approaches elsewhere in the world.]

[The objectives of the Training Workshop and Round Table Meeting were threefold. They aimed to (1) strengthen awareness and capacity to undertake marine turtle research, education, and conservation activities in Vietnam, (2) improve national access to current knowledge and experience, and (3) increase institutional cooperation between national partners and international organisations involved in the research and conservation of marine turtles. For example, by giving them the skills to participate in regional policy development and cooperative efforts designed to protect turtles in Vietnam, during migration events, and when nesting or foraging in other countries.]

Linguistics

English – Vietnamese Dictionary = Tu Dien Anh-Viet

Ho Chi Ming : Nha Xuat Ban TP, 2002

2139 p.; 23cm.

[A group of Vietnamese linguists have hit upon an idea so clever it seems obvious. Instead of compiling a bilingual dictionary from scratch, why not take a well-tried

English-English dictionary, and translate the definitions into Vietnamese? The advantage of doing this is not what it may appear at first. It is not easier to compile a dictionary this way. It must be a painful process to translate definitions exactly and find equivalents for words and expressions chosen by others, but that is power of the method. All the meanings and common expressions of words considered to be important by English compilers of an English dictionary have their equivalent in Vietnamese, or an explanation if there is no equivalent. It is precisely these idiomatic expressions and subtle variations of meaning that users of bilingual dictionaries usually wrack their brains to decipher.

Since the writers of the English expressions and the writers of the Vietnamese equivalents are each native speakers, the dictionary has none of the stilted quality of many bilingual dictionaries. One hopes that a good Vietnamese-Vietnamese dictionary will be translated into a Vietnamese-English dictionary by native English speakers. Despite its higher price than other English-Vietnamese dictionaries, the "blue light" dictionary of the Linguistics Institute is recognized to be indispensable for serious users of both languages, both by Vietnamese and foreign researchers.]

[During the twentieth century, several million rural inhabitants of Vietnam's northern deltas made the decision to move home, seeking to make new homes in the country's highlands. The decisions and the settlements they created had wide-ranging effects on their home communities and on the people and environment of their destinations. Many migrations were made in response to policy decisions made in Hanoi, first by the French colonial authorities and later by Vietnam's independent socialist states.

A groundbreaking study of the settlement of Vietnam's highland regions, this volume offers a historical analysis of and provides profound insights into the political economy of migration both in Vietnam and elsewhere. It shows how socialist policies especially changed the face of the highlands, as settlers from the plains turned the hills 'red'. Placing people's experiences in the context of government policy and national history, this book explores their anticipations, difficulties, achievements and disappointments, highlighting the geopolitical importance of the highlands. It can be read as a contribution to migration studies in Southeast Asia, but also a grassroots history of twentieth-century Vietnam. The book's perspectives on methodology will also be valuable for researchers doing fieldwork in Vietnam.]

For example, mouth organs in Borneo and continental southeast Asia are absent in the Philippines, where, however, separate pipes of panpipes are on occasion still being played by groups of boys among the Kalingga of Luzon. The musical elements of drone and melody identified in two lutes in Borneo or ensembles in Yunnan find examples in two players of the same tube zither in Mindanao and flat gongs in Luzon.]

[This book is the fruit of two decades of research and association with the social realists and other protest and revolutionary artists in the subject which has consistently engaged the author. Here she goes to the origins of protest art in the 19th Century and pursues it to its full flourishing in the Marcos regime and to the forms it took during the Cory Aquino government. The examples have also been drawn from the production of the two decades. While the book traces the history of protest / Revolutionary art, it also projects its trajectory into the future as new issues emerge to engage the political artist in the struggle for a just and truly human order.]

[Widely known as "Bencab," Filipino artist Benedicto Cabrera Occupies a secure and permanent place in the history of contemporary Philippine art. Premised on the strength of draftsmanship and driven by images that have struck emotional chords in the national consciousness, his art possesses that rare quality : an authentic kinship between artist and audience.

The first section of the book, "Hand over Heart : A life for Bencab" is written by Palanca Hall of Famer and personal friend, Krip Yuson. The second part of the book, The Art of Being Filipino, the essay argues for the aesthetic potency and significance of all of Bencab's visual themes.]

[This book presents a fresh perspective by using communication as the disciplinary framework and highlighting commonalities. This book is a "first" in the sense that it examines the tenets found in religion and culture which in fact are basic and fundamental. Thus the papers drew heavily from the Bible, the Qur'an and the 1987 constitution as well as from early historical accounts and teachings of Muslim and Christian scholars.]

[After more than three decades of protectionism, the Philippines is now shifting toward a more open economy through liberalization, deregulation, and privatization. The reforms that started in the mid-1980s have contributed to moving the economy toward a more market – friendly policy environment. In the process, however, new problems have merged, the most pressing of which pertain to the anticompetitive behaviour of some industry players who would rather avoid competition and exercise some control to gain market power. And while there is a proliferation of laws governing competition, there appears to be a lack of a consistent, comprehensive, and rational competition policy. The role of the national competition policy thus becomes both utilitarian and timely to ensure that the market works effectively and produces economic efficiency, and consumers get substantial and ongoing benefits.]

[The State of the Philippine Housing Programs is a Critical study on housing subsidies, one of the principal instruments the government uses to provide the lower income segment of the population access to decent housing. Each year, the government spends large fiscal resources to finance the subsidy programs. These resources have competing, alternative uses, and any misallocation imposes costs to society. And with the huge fiscal deficit that the country is currently facing, it is but both utilitarian and timely to review the especially the various subsidies. Despite the provision of these housing subsidies, a large majority of the urban poor are still housed in overcrowded shanties within slum settlements or in makeshift dwellings. Does this mean that the housing subsidies have not been successful in helping their intended beneficiaries get a decent shelter? Find our the answers from this book.]

[China's phenomenal rise as an economic giant in the past two decades poses a paradox to the ASEAN countries. On the one hand, China is viewed as a competitor, vying for a share in the world market for the same kind of labour intensive export products. On the other hand, its economic growth offers new investment opportunities and markets for the ASEAN countries. Overall, the running conclusion in this volume indicates that engaging China economically and politically is very much in the interest of the individual ASEAN countries and the region as a whole.]

Whether or not these schemes indeed generate more revenues for the government is taken up in the study. Meanwhile, the accompanying special papers evaluate the capability and absorptive capacity of the department of the public works and Highways, and the department of Health to implement locally funded and foreign-assisted programs and projects. Both studies provide critical information on the extent and magnitude of resource utilization and look the factors that hinder the full absorption of available resources.]

[The first volume documents the urbanization process in selected Philippine cities in the context of a decentralized environment for governance resulting from the passage of the local government code of 1991. It shows the impacts of decentralization on the way governance takes place at the local level, and how urbanization, which has impinged heavily on the fiscal conditions of the various localities, is being managed. The Second volume offers the institutional details of managing and delivering urban services. This second volume, meanwhile, explores the setting in which these services are being delivered – one of rapid urbanization mostly unaccompanied by balanced regional growth – and the forces that have helped shape this environment.]

[This is an engaging exploration of Philippine cultural history. It is striking for the diversity of texts it takes up : the legend of a mountain goddess, Pigafetta's discovery account of the Philippines, the life of a seventeenth-century Christian convert, the foundation narrative of a Marian shrine, colonial books of conduct, memoirs of Filipino intellectuals, a Bisayan love poem, political talk on radio, a dinner in nineteenth-century Cebu. A singleness of purpose guides the reader through a forest of texts toward an appreciation of the larger issues of cultural politics and national formation.

This collection of essays rewards the reader with the richness and originality of its insights. It is a model for the study of Philippine history and culture.]

[The Revolution of 1896 marks the birth of the Filipino nation. It was a time when propagandists and radical advocates, both in and outside the Catholic Church, were pressing for an independent nation, separate from Spain. It was an extraordinary time, and this volume makes available to readers selected works by scholars from different parts of the world, using varied historical sources, bringing in new perspectives on the war. Topics in this volume include the influx of refugees to Cavite, which affected the rivalry between Bonifacio and Aguinaldo the travails of the Franciscan friars the hopes and fears of a young Spanish soldier the restrained exasperation of an aide-de-camp to the German cruiser squadron and the circuitous "intra-Asian" trade. These and the other essays in this volume reassess questions on the Revolution and the period it covers gender, ethnicity, military, and corruption.]

[Documents about the early period of American rule in the Philippines contain many silences and gaps surrounding the question of Filipino women in American Colonial discourse. This is especially the case in those written documents that have been traditionally accepted as the sources of historical investigation by mainstream professional historians. Representation of Filipinas by American Colonizers from 1898 to 1910 renders invisible historical Filipinas of the past, re-presenting them in written and visual texts as white Americans perceived them. These colonial histories write more about the colonizers than the people they colonized. Concentrating on the margins of the Philippine colonial society and particular historical knowledge about the Philippines. Colonizing Filipinas is about those colonial processes that formed Filipinos and Philippine colonial society. It is about the debt that colonialism owes to Filipinas.]

[A Passing Season is the Saga of Families during the time of the twin wars of 1896 and 1898, known in history as the Philippine Revolution and the Filipino – American War. It is the story of the Eduartes, the de Almogueiras, the Herreras, and their neighbor and occasional friends, the Ricaforts, trying to hold on to old and trusted rituals of daily life amidst the turbulence and upheaval in the last years of the nineteenth century in Manila.

Most of all, A Passing Season is a novel about ordinary People – of Tibor and Aurora, Masin and his cousin Subas, of Torcuato, the Servant boy who knows no other existence, but who, in the end, establishes a kinship with the epical heroes of the nation because his sacrifice has not been less noble.]

[Qudarat, Lord of the Pulangi is historical fiction of the highest order. In straightforward, Lucid Prose, it recounts the life and times of Sultan Kudarat, the 17th century Muslim leader of Mindanao who defied the might of the Spaniards to forge a Muslim leader of Minanao who defied the might of the Spaniards to forge a Muslim nation in the south. Told from the point of view of a Tagalog slave with Christian roots, the novel powerfully trains the spotlight on the historic roots of the Christian-Muslim Problems in Mindanao. It provides details of the southern advance of the Spaniards propelled by the Zeal of Catholic missionaries and the minutiae of the struggles of the Muslim communities to preserve their way of life animated by the tenets of Allah. The result is a remarkable tapestry of the clash of civilizations that continues up to now.]

[The essays and various pieces in this volume reflect the contradictions, the tensions and the various "loose ends" which characterized the death throes of the Suharto era. Although they have been overtaken by several momentous events which have transpired since them, they can be of use to the reader who wished to catch a whiff of the zeitgeist of the late 1990s. In general the authors hew to an antiauthoritarian and antifundamentalist norm, while remaining alert to the grand designs of western governments and financial institutions. Indeed it is nearly impossible for the scholar, of whatever nationality, to pretend to be completely above the Indonesian fray. There is thus no attempt to present the contents of this collection as a mere chronicle of events.]

[Grass Roots and Cadre investigates the processes of recruitment, protest, debate, and contestation in a Philippine social movement between 1986 and 1988. By close comparison and narrative construction, the author presents a story of how three grass-roots collectives – UMALUN, DIWA, and KASAMA – were recruited by BISIG, a political movement, and how those unities fared amidst changing political and social conditions. The story, spun by the author from his analytical interpretation of numerous interviews and first-hand observations in the field, provides the basis for broader speculation on the social dynamics of protest in the Philippines.]

[In 1992, Xavier University through the Community Development Committee embarked on a project to develop a 150-hectare property in Upper Balulang, Cagayan de Oro City.

The effort was propelled by a shared vision that aspired for development for the good of all not just of the university or its faculty and staff, but also of the land's occupants who had lived in it for years, and ultimately of Cagayan's citizens. Those who believed in this shared vision were the members of the community development committee. They negotiated with individuals as well as groups conducted information campaigns, harnessed networks and linkages, and applied creative solutions to problems.

The entire project proved to be an invaluable experience in community building and conflict resolution, replete with lessons for similar undertakings.]

[The Changing Face of the Filipino is an informational and inspirational book about the contemporary youth in the Philippines. It invites serious reflection about how to address the issues relevant to the development of young Filipinos by tracing the evolution of their distinct subculture and by drawing on diverse perspectives.

The first part of the book looks at the youth against the backdrop of the changing national and global milieu during the last five decades of the 20th century. IT was over the same period that the salesians made their growing presence felt in Philippine society.]

[Sometimes it is much easier to get acquainted with a country's cultural icons than getting to know natives or locals of that particular country.

In the Philippines, a large number of popular images or icons crop up when the word "Filipino" is mentioned.

The cultural icons that have shaped him in the past may not necessarily be the only determining factors since the Filipino has this innate tendency to innovate or to modify not merely on whims but more importantly to blend, to harmonize, to be one with his fellow Filipinos. For purposes of practical classification, the book is divided into several categories a] material objects from nature b] food and beverage / drinks c] tourists destinations d]cultural practices or traditions and e] personalities from heroes to cultural divas to sports and pop icons.

The last chapter features prominent Filipinos who express their own choices of cultural icons and why. Among these include Jaime Cardinal Sin, Cabinet secretaries, respected professionals, topnotch business executives, women entrepreneurs, artists and cultural workers.]

[This review of current research on gender concerns in population and development shows that gender concerns are development concerns. Gender does make a difference : reproductive health concerns, migration, agriculture and environmental management, new technologies and globalization all have differential effects on women and men. Gender must be taken into account in the formulation of policies and programs, if we are to follow an integrated development approach that works for the maximum welfare and full participation of both women and men. Hence, it is essential to close the gender gap.]
