The book is a historical treatise of Dr. Tran Ngoc Dung - lecturer and researcher of Hanoi National University of Education. In this research work, Tran Ngoc Dung mainly focuses on the relationship between the two countries Britain and Vietnam in the fields of trade, diplomacy, politics and military through analyzing the development process of a major trading representative at that time, the British East India Company, and became a strategic card to serve the government and the goal of expanding the territory of the British Empire. With rare and scattered Vietnamese documents, the author had to search and exploit the British archives and accordingly, he leaned towards the stance and perspective of the British, specifically the British East India Company in relation to Vietnam at this period. Notably, the work also provides many important documents on Vietnamese history, meticulous notes on Vietnam's internal problems during the feudal separation period.

The French colonial education policy brought both negative and positive things, making contributions to modern education. For the purpose of providing original documents, contributing to the planning of new educational policies, the book collects legal documents of the colonial government and archives related to education at all levels in Vietnam from 1858-1945. These are selected texts from the French language archive currently preserved at the National Archives Center I. The content of the book reflects relatively fully and comprehensively Vietnam's education as well as the guidelines and policies of the French government on education in the period 1858 - 1945. During this period, the French carried out successive education reforms, from which the three-level education system in Vietnam was basically formed. Through the education policy of France, the Vietnamese have selectively absorbed new knowledge of Western civilization and enriched the culture of the Vietnamese nation.

Referring to Hue, many people think of the mausoleums, silent palaces... Mentioning Hue, people think of the Perfume River, Ngu Mountain, Truong Tien Bridge, young girls in elegant purple Ao Dai... In addition, the land of Thua Thien Hue also hides many mysterious and interesting stories about folk beliefs, because here there are many ethnic groups that have been living interwoven and harmoniously to coexist and develop. That not only contributes to the mystery of Hue ancient capital in particular, but also this whole strip of Thua Thien. That is also the basis to enrich the folklore values here. Each ethnic group, over time, continues to inherit and create on the basis of the inherited heritage. Hue folk paintings are one of such heritages. In the process of studying documents and conducting field surveys in Thua Thien Hue, the author has shown the beauty, making techniques and value of Sinh village folk paintings; traditional hand-painted paintings; glass mirror painting; embroidery; folk paintings of Chuon village; Mural...

The Khơ Mú (Khmu) people are one of the largest ethnic groups living in northern Southeast Asia. They reside in northern Laos, Myanmar, southwestern China (in the Xishuangbanna Autonomous Region of Yunnan Province), Thailand, and Vietnam. In Vietnam, the Khơ Mú people are one of the 54 ethnic groups in Vietnam. In China, however, they are not officially recognized as a separate ethnic group but are placed in a broad category of unclassified ethnic groups. The Khơ Mú people speak the Khơ Mú language, a language in the Mon-Khmer language family of the Austroasiatic language family. The Khơ Mú are the earliest ethnic groups living in Laos, along with the Mon in Thailand and the Muong in Vietnam to form the earliest indigenous communities in the region.

Experiencing many upheavals of history, the Dao Tien people in Cao Bang province still retain their customs, traditions, and cultural characteristics as a deep community connection. The spiritual and cultural life of the Dao people in general and the Dao Tien people in particular is very rich with many unique customs and rituals. The special thing is that most of the customs and rituals, including traditional costumes, remind the descendants of their national roots. In particular, each symbol of pattern, home decoration or on clothes, daily items of the Dao Tien people have hidden in it certain meanings about human outlook, origin history.

The back and forth worries, the inner struggles, the emotions that go from lost to anger, pride, and peace. That is the mind of a young Vietnamese girl who settled in the US, but at the same time it is also the heart of many people with two homelands on this planet. Will they find refuge in their multi-faceted souls or forever stuck in the corridor between two doors, longing to belong? Nguyễn Đan Thy (or Thy Nguyễn) was born in Saigon, Vietnam and moved to Houston, Texas when she was a middle school student. Although she graduated with a Bachelor of Science in Business from Babson University, Đan Thy has always been fascinated by the arts and especially loves writing. Over the years, she has always focused on social changes for marginalized groups, especially those who experience unconscious racial discrimination and insults.

Nom poetry by Nguyen Trai and Nguyen Binh Khiem (Comparative Literature Research - New Transliteration and Annotation) is a very elaborate scientific work compiled based on modern scientific methods and processed by the experience of an expert on Nom script over the past few decades. Medieval Vietnamese literature has left us two great cultural celebrities, Nguyen Trai and Nguyen Binh Khiem. In particular, these are two poets whose masterpieces are written in Nom script - the Vietnamese script which is a precious capital of national literature. But unfortunately, those two rare Nom works were mixed with more than 30 articles, it is not clear which one is by Nguyen Trai and which is by Nguyen Binh Khiem.

"Proactive and comprehensive security" is the content throughout the XIII Party Congress Document on national security and national security protection in the new situation. This point of view is reflected succinctly and deeply in the book New Points on National Security in the Document of the 13th Party Congress by General, Prof. Dr. To Lam, Politburo member, Secretary of the Central Public Security Party Committee, and Minister of Public Security. The book is divided into 2 parts. The first part is a new context and generalizes new points in awareness and thinking about national security and national security protection. In this section, from the recognition that the international context is complicated and difficult to predict, strongly affecting the security environment of Vietnam and analyzing the domestic context after 35 years of renovation, the Party has had a more comprehensive and profound awareness and thinking on national security and national security protection. The second part includes some new highlights on national security and national security protection.

Vietnamese Fine Arts - From the other side (Illustration and commentary) is a collection of 25 monographs on the history of Vietnamese art by author Tran Hau Yen The. The author used a different approach, a way of selecting research samples unlike previous researchers. The author like a child is not only engrossed in looking at the massive door, but also interested, looking at the hinge, the latch, the small details, to think about the opening and closing mechanism of that gate. To look is to observe, to examine is also to look, but to look carefully, to look suspiciously to uncover interesting problems. The book examines and illuminates the real and beautiful phenomena of Vietnamese people from prehistory to the first half of the twentieth century that history has covered with the dust of time.

Hue capital in the 19th century was the gathering place for the quintessence of the country after the territory and government were unified. Here, national power in terms of managing the state apparatus, territory, sea and islands, population... has been strongly demonstrated. Hue imperial capital in the 19th century was also the place where many new national architectural works were built and many achievements in the architecture of ramparts and palaces of the world were built, including the citadel, palaces, mausoleums and pagodas... with interesting landscapes, giving Hue a unique architectural style, a unique culture including food, costumes, houses, music, theater, festivals, religious lifestyles... Hue Citadel in the 19th century has become a world cultural heritage with a variety of categories: tangible (architectural heritage); intangible (Hue Royal Refined Music); memory (Administrative documents of the feudal period; Poetry on Hue royal architecture).

In the section of modern Vietnamese minority literature, poet Y Phuong has a special position. He is not only a talented poet who has won many high awards of modern Vietnamese poetry, but also the author of unique prose, winning the love and admiration of a large number of readers. 'Waves of Tày language is a collection of his typical prose poems. It can be said that the Tày cultural identity is as unique as a sediment lying deep in the source of Y Phuong's inspiration. And "Tày language" seems to be the thing that always makes him proud, cherish and elaborate. Each story in the book is proof of that, and also confirms one thing: Y Phuong is an extremely fluent user of the Tày language. Each story in the book is proof of that, and also confirms one thing: Y Phuong is an extremely fluent user of the Tày language. On the basis of being fluent in both Tày and Vietnamese languages, although he wrote in Vietnamese, the Tày nuance was still clearly expressed.

Ke Buoï, Yen Thai, Trich Sai are places in the ancient land located in the northwest of Hanoi capital. In the past, there were many craft villages in the ancient Buoï region, in which there were two famous handicrafts: weaving (Bai An, Trich Sai villages) and making Dó paper (Ho Khau, Yen Thai villages). At present, the once famous craft villages only exist in the memory of the village elders and the remaining historical sites. Life has changed but the traditional historical and cultural values are still here. Present in the old houses, the village gates, the historical and cultural relics are still preserved by generations of people as the remaining unique features of the land near the ancient Thang Long citadel.

Pham Dinh Ho (1768 - 1839) was a famous scholar who lived in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. This book by Pham Dinh Ho was researched, interpreted and translated by translator Tran Thi Kim Anh - former staff of the Institute of Sino-Nom studies. In addition to the content of the genealogy, the translator also translated Pham Dinh Ho's writing about his deceased wife and the meeting between him and King Minh Menh in Thang Long in 1821. In this sub-translation, in addition to valuable historical documents, readers can also have access to many documents to understand more deeply about this famous author and his life. The original book was written by Pham Dinh Ho in a research style, so it is rich in historical material. It can be said that this is a valuable research document on the history, geography, customs and habits of some localities, village organizations, traditional Confucian families and especially the education and examinations.

A place name reflects the continuum of life history in a location and therefore must itself have a long life. However, a large number of places have been given names that only existed for a limited time. In fact, there are place names that confuse rather than facilitate distinction. Therefore, to make it more reasonable, it is advisable to adjust the places that no longer hold the right function to distinguish one place from another. In this adjustment work, consideration should also be given to names of persons whose mention in a place may evoke negative connotations.

Nam Phong magazine is a monthly magazine published in Vietnam from July 1, 1917 to December 1934, consisting of 210 issues for 17 years with the editor Pham Quynh. The achievement of modernizing Vietnamese literature and culture from the first world war to 1945 would be unthinkable without the introduction of Nam Phong Magazine. Advancing the style of "academic literature" and pioneering in this field, Pham Quynh introduced, translated, edited many works, doctrines, academic trends of France and the West, imparted new knowledge to Vietnamese people. Equally important is that he, along with many others, has translated a series of scientific, philosophical and ideological terms that underlie the development of later academic thinking significantly enriched Vietnamese academic vocabulary. This book, written by Professor Nguyen Duc Thuan, is a valuable document to help readers identify and study Vietnamese culture and literature in the early period of formation and development in the early twentieth century.

The book once again analyzes and clarifies the lesson of combining national strength with the strength of the times that made the victory of the resistance war against the French colonialists as well as all victories of the Vietnamese revolution. In the period from 1946-1954, people-to-people diplomacy contributed mainly to opening up international contacts when our country was isolated from the outside. Vietnam's people's organizations (trade unions, women, youth, etc.) send many delegations to international campaigns to enlist the world's support for the resistance war, and at the same time contribute to the struggle of the world's people against war and protection of peace.

The book gathers 21 articles from leading scientists, historians and legal experts from universities, research institutes, and localities. The content in this book was selected from the seminar "Hoang Sa and Truong Sa in Vietnamese history" organized by the Thua Thien Hue Science and Technology Association. The book focuses on topics including: Hoang Sa and Truong Sa in history; solutions to fight to protect sovereignty; heritage and traditional education. Researchers assert that for thousands of years, sea and islands have been an important trade gateway of Vietnam with regional and international markets, a place of interference and integration with cultures around the world, an inexhaustible resource for socio-economic development, a particularly important line of defense for national defense and security.

Labor mobility is always associated with the process of industrialization, urbanization and the development of each country or each locality. The content of the book shows that along with the continuous decline in rubber prices in recent years, labor mobility has caused instability and puts pressure on labor shortage (especially young workers) for smallholder rubber industry. This poses problems for the smallholder rubber area in general and Binh Duong in particular for future existence and development. The author focuses on reflecting the actual labor situation, trend of shifting smallholder rubber workers in Binh Duong province in the context of the province's high urbanization in recent years, and comments on the trend of smallholder rubber labor movement in the future.

Land acquisition, land requisition, compensation, support, and resettlement is a particularly important regulation of current land law. Even through the development of the country since the first time the Land Law of the National Assembly No. 3-LCT/HDNN8 dated December 29, 1987 was passed and took effect on January 8, 1988. Up to now, the regulations on land acquisition, land requisition, compensation, support and resettlement have basically been completed through the 2013 Land Law, along with it are Decrees, Circulars guiding the implementation in detail, creating a legal corridor for land acquisition, land requisition, compensation, support, and resettlement to be somewhat more convenient and easier.

Study and talent promotion is always an important driving force in human development strategy; at the same time is a practical need in social life from the past to the present. With the policy of considering education as the top national policy, today, education promotion needs more attention and promotion, with many effective measures. It is necessary to learn, research, and draw from past experiences of study promotion to refine, inherit and promote for the present. The book focuses on exploiting the study promotion information of Nghe An province through Han-Nom sources such as: customs, scientific records, genealogy, family training, geography and inscriptions. This source of material was associated with Confucian education until the early years of the twentieth century, when the Confucian examination ended and the reform period began (1919-1921).

Family ceremony is in the simplest sense, a word that refers to ritual activities in the family and clan. Not only rituals and ceremonies in the family, they also carry superlative values, becoming one of the tools to support justice and improve Confucian ethics. In the context of the Confucian era, the large class of Confucians, the publication of Confucian family bibliographies, and pears in Vietnamese families changed from Buddhist to Confucian nuances, creating a two-way effect. Through the author's analysis, readers will visualize the main features of the whole development process of the type of text - works on family rituals as well as the history of Confucian ritual rites. in Vietnamese families placed in the context of traditional East Asian culture. We all agree that Vietnamese alphabet is the script that Western missionaries and many Vietnamese people use Latin to record Vietnamese pronunciation. Initially, Vietnamese alphabet was only for missionary purposes, but later, it was widely accepted by the people. Since then, the contribution and influence of Vietnamese alphabet to society has been an inseparable companion with history. Understanding the importance, many researchers have studied and mentioned the history of formation and spread of this script.

After many ups and downs, in 1802 Nguyen Anh won a victory over the Tay Son army, establishing the Nguyen dynasty and opening the reign and lasting 143 years of the last monarchy in Vietnam. During his reign, the first 4 kings of the Nguyen Dynasty, from Gia Long, Minh Mang to Thieu Tri, Tu Duc worked hard to build a strong centralized monarchy state apparatus. As a result, compared with the previous Vietnamese monarchies, in the first 8 decades, the Nguyen dynasty built a fairly complete state apparatus from the central to the local. The state apparatus of the Nguyen Dynasty was built on the basis of selectively inheriting the previous Vietnamese and contemporary Qing (Chinese) state apparatuses. Originally in Chinese, published in Taiwan in 1996, is a review on the Sino-French dispute in the late 19th and early 20th centuries, closely related to the history of Vietnam under the Nguyen Dynasty. Long Chuong's research is a major scholarly work, focusing on China's intervention when the French launched the war to colonize Indochina. The details presented are almost unknown to most of us, or if so, only vaguely. It is a pity that in a period of hot oil and fire, the fate of Vietnam is not decided in Hanoi, Hue or Saigon but in faraway places such as Paris, Beijing, Tianjin, or Shanghai. Diplomatic disputes and commercial concessions led to the decision that many border areas should be kept for our country or belonged to China's territory. Those negotiations did not understand whether the Hue court knew about it or not, but have not seen it mentioned in the national history.

Religious policy under the Nguyen Dynasty, especially under King Tu Duc, was a period that left profound imprints and played an important role in the policy towards feudal religion in Vietnam. It can be said that the Nguyen dynasty really mastered and perfected the regime during the first four dynasties. The main directions of social management policy in general and religious policy in particular of the Nguyen Dynasty were basically formed and developed at this stage. The Tu Duc period was the most notable focus when studying the religious policy of the Nguyen Dynasty, this was a very complicated period, the court had to deal with Western colonists as well as the religion they brought.
