Do you know in Brunei we used to have a festival called Āberjanawari¹? Or that the Brunei word for great-great-great grandparents is the same as the action describing shaking your head? Or that Brunei's largest export used to be derived from mangrove trees? Or that ĀHua Hui¹ a gambling game was widely played in Brunei? Or the many facts that you have never known about Brunei?

This is the second compilation of articles of the history of many aspects of Brunei ranging from when Brunei was a maritime empire in the region to today. No subject matter is too small or too big for the author as long as it is about Brunei.

This is the story of Hiroyuki Mizuguchi, a Japanese gentleman who grew up and studied in the Philippines and survived the Pacific war under the Japanese flag in Luzon with unusual experiences. He wrote the book in order to share that life, as well as spread messages of peace through example. The book is written in an engaging style that will appeal to readers of all ages. Through his novel, students will get a unique picture of World War II; the struggles of families in the war torn city and countryside, and the severed friendships between Filipinos and Japanese. The author, aged 93, has lived in Davao City for the past 50 years.

"...to find Chino, the real Chino, is to look hard. He is not one of those characters of history you hear about or read about or otherwise learn about other than by purposeful inquiry. He left, if at all, little documentary material. He did deliver speeches, but they were ceremonial... obviously ghostwritten, prolix and roundabout, a forest built around a single tree of freedom or justice or some other cause; he'd have expressed himself more economically yet better if only he had chosen to speak.. spoke little yet said much - instead of talking, he acted; he did not have to lead to be followed."
