- Male Support for Gender Equality / Olivia A.T.F. Kwapong
Accra, Ghana: Ghana University Press, 2009
xi. 187p. ; 22cm.

Governments, organizations, civil society, and private individuals have all contributed to promoting equality between men and women. The gender agenda considers men and women as partners in development who need equal support to enhance their participation in culture, religion, governance, and the pursuit of economic opportunity.

Most would agree that society has achieved considerable gains under the gender agenda. However, there are still significant disparities in the social, political, and economic status of women. It is the persistent marginalization of women that has led to policies and programs to empower women. Laudable as these policies and programs are, there is uneasiness among most men that they are not wanted as promoters of the gender agenda. This uneasiness is misplaced. The demands of globalization and the technological revolution have led to new societal challenges that can meaningfully be addressed only with the joint effort of both men and women.

This book recognizes the critical interdependencies between men and women in dealing with the challenges that confront our common humanity. The book emphasizes the need to draw on the energies of both men and women to achieve the vision and goals of the gender agenda.

The Architecture for Violence against Women in Ghana / Kathy Cusack & Takyiwaa Manuh (Edited)
Accra North, Ghana: Gender Studies and Human Rights Documentation Centre, 2009
xiii. 337p. ; 24cm.
ISBN-13: 9789988127749
$ 39.50

This publication is another effort by the Gender Centre to deepen knowledge and understanding of the factors that underpin and sustain violence against women.

The title of the book clearly illustrates that violence against women, like a building has many facets which together make it what it is. You cannot have a strong building when you ignore some of the materials that go into making it complete. In the same way, you cannot effectively address, reduce or eliminate violence against women without addressing the multiple facets of violence against women.
