1. Historic preservation – Singapore
2. City planning – Social aspects – Singapore
3. Public housing – Singapore – Pictorial works

567 households. 187 shops and stalls. Four iconic housing blocks. In 2011, Rochor Centre was given its demolition sentence. In the days of packing up that followed, residents confronted the question of what to keep, what to throw out, where to go.

These records will provide knowledge and encourage modern people to preserve the traditional Thai houses. Some parts might be carefully preserved, while the whole of some traditional Thai houses have been fabricated by people who are immensely fond of the beauty of the traditional Thai houses. Modern architects also assemble the traditional Thai houses with advanced construction techniques, making them to fit the current living styles. Every single Thai house is well adapted to its surrounding environment. These days, traditional Thai houses have a wide range of very attractive and elegant styles.
